LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

Bob Harris

Emil Kadlec

Fantasy football is a game of numbers. Assessing value based on projected statistical production. That's how it works, right?

So I have some good news.

You'll find no shortage of numbers in this year's Fantasy Football Cheatsheets. Of course, we not only provide the numbers necessary to do your crunching (including our new snap-count data, target data and other cutting-edge stats), you'll find an assortment of articles and analysis that will offer insights into the best methods for coming up with your own numbers and how to apply said numbers in unique, interesting and forward-thinking ways.

Along the way, we offer you a wide range of opinion on some of the more intangible factors associated with the game.

Our panel of industry professionals will offer up their rankings and other opinions to help you sort out your own projections. We'll cover all the major variations of the hobby, including season-long, dynasty and keeper, auction, individual defensive player, auction and of course daily fantasy sports.

Our mission is to make sure you're the best-informed owner in your league at any given time.

As always, we urge you to use this magazine to create your baseline of information then head for FootballDiehards.com to take advantage of our premium content to build on the foundation laid here. Those of you who purchase this edition of the Cheatsheets will benefit from free access to our complete on-line content, tools and analysis -- all of which is updated on a daily basis throughout the preseason and (if you choose) over the course of the entire regular season and postseason. This includes access to our mobile apps and tools.

So yeah. We have what you're after. Numbers and all.

But as I was initially checking the design of this magazine as our press date grew close, my first look at the cover revealed a surprising number. The 2016 Cheatsheets is our 19th edition. It seems like only yesterday that we were rolling out the initial edition in 1998.

What's changed since then?

In a word? Everything.

But perhaps the most amazing aspect of all this has been has been the growth of the game.

According to the Fantasy Sports Trade Association, 57.4 million of us in North America played fantasy sports in 2015. This is the highest number of players recorded in the history of the study and a nearly 1 percent increase over the previous year's participation. The record number of players builds upon two years of rapid growth that saw the industry expand by nearly 15 percent.

The FSTA added that much of the continued growth can be attributed to the on-going popularity of the season-long format, as 82 percent of players still play season-long fantasy sports.

And we're a powerful bunch.

The FSTA research indicates that 54 percent of us would cancel a league-supported media service if not for fantasy sports (TV channels, satellite service, apps, etc.). Go ahead and put the NFL and its broadcast partners on the list of those aware of that fact.

Fantasy players are more interested in sports because of fantasy, with 64 percent reporting they are watching more live sports because of fantasy and 61 percent saying they read more about sports because of fantasy.

So if you're holding this edition of the Cheatsheets in your hands right now, it's safe to assume you're part of that very large group. So the fact you're already starting to build that baseline and gaining that edge on the competition is a wise move.

The more who play, the harder the successful players have to work to stay successful. Get after it and best of luck this season.

2016 Player Moves

New Destinations Lead To New Valuations

– Joe Levit

When real estate becomes available on the marketplace, it is up to an independent appraiser to determine the value of the property. That theoretical value, established through a combination of demand, scarcity and utility, may be entirely different than the eventual price of the property – that's decided by the buyer.

In much the same way, you as a fantasy owner must determine the new and current value of skill-position players who have switched teams during the offseason. Each player's value may be in question because of a trade, or because he found a new home in free agency. But whatever the reason, acquiring players at or below your estimation of their value is what will enable you to build the foundation of a winning team. To help round out your own opinion, here are my thoughts about some of the more intriguing player transactions this offseason, with a 12-team fantasy league in mind.

Quarterbacks

Brock Osweiler – Free Agency (Denver to Houston)

Osweiler is an interesting case. We don't have enough "game tape" to be certain of his value. However, he has moved to a team that not only has a top end No. 1 wide receiver currently on the roster (DeAndre Hopkins) but also committed to providing him some new weapons. The Texans selected burner Will Fuller and athlete extraordinaire Braxton Miller during the 2016 draft.

We'll see how the offense shakes out, but, assuming these pieces are properly put in place, I think Osweiler's floor is as a high-end backup fantasy quarterback. And if you miss out on your top 8-10 quarterback choices, he would be a prime player to put in tandem with another quarterback of similar caliber who you could choose between based on weekly NFL scheduling matchups.

Robert Griffin III – Free Agency (Washington to Cleveland)

Much of his value will depend upon whether he is physically able to both stay on the field and recapture his penchant for gaining yards on the ground. He's a sleeper type of pickup to be sure. You can't go drafting him with the intention of having to use him.

However, once he gets his legs under him again he might provide surprising returns for the pick you spend on him. A few factors to keep in mind: He has worked in the offseason with throwing mechanics maven Tom House, an expert who has also tutored Tom Brady and Drew Brees. His team took a dynamic receiver – Baylor's Corey Coleman – early in the draft giving Griffin a top target in the passing game. And, there is no doubt that Cleveland will be playing from behind for much of the season. That should lead to "garbage time" opportunities to pad stats.

Running Backs

DeMarco Murray – Trade (Philadelphia to Tennessee)

If the Titans hadn't taken Heisman Trophy winner Derrick Henry in the draft's second round, then Murray would be in position to make a run at the 2016 rushing title. After all, the Texans also added first-rounder Jack Conklin to man the RT spot, giving the team above-average bookend tackles who excel in the run game.

But even with Henry aboard, Murray should figure prominently as a fantasy RB. He has been above 4.7 yards per carry three times in his five-season career (albeit behind an elite Dallas line). The real key is gauging where to select him, since he is a big name but has never posted consistently-impressive TD numbers and may not even get those goal-line opportunities with Henry in tow. I see him as a mid-level RB2, who you will probably miss out on if another owner values him as a low-end RB1.

Chris Ivory – Free Agency (New York to Jacksonville)

Ivory, who is also in a backfield timeshare, will end up in a similar tier (mid-level RB2) as Murray, but for different reasons. Ivory is a hard-nosed runner who breaks tackles and runs downhill, but is susceptible to injury for those same reasons. He'll get the majority of carries on this team, but T.J. Yeldon will spell him on some series. Fortunately, even though Ivory has never made a real red-zone impact, he'll be given the rock in goal-line scenarios.

Lamar Miller – Free Agency (Miami to Houston)

Simply underused as a Dolphin, Miller will be the workhorse in Houston. His quickness in space and ability to make something happen after a catch set him up to succeed on a team that already has a superstar at the wide receiver position. His youth and freshness will work in his favor, so expect a drastic uptick in his numbers across the board. It's telling that he had his best yards per carry average (5.1) during the year he had the most opportunity (216 carries). I see him as a low to mid-range RB1.

Matt Forte – Free Agency (Chicago to New York)

While it's clear that backup running back Bilal Powell will get work on passing downs (his salary this season would demand he sees touches), and that the former Bears' back is a year older, there is still a lot to like about Forte from a fantasy perspective.

First, he's a proud player. This means he'll be motivated to show everyone that Chicago shouldn't have been so quick to move on from their best back since Walter Payton. And, since he's logged more than 250 carries in a season only four times (and over 300 times only in his rookie season), he still has stuff "left in the tank."

He's a durable back that you can count on, and, assuming that Ryan Fitzpatrick is back under center, the offense won't rely on him alone to move the chains. The team will give him a high workload both on the ground and through the air once it realizes that Forte is someone who can be counted on to consistently pick up chunks of yardage. If Ryan Clady can retain his health, that will only help the cause. Forte is a RB1 that you might be able to snag in RB2 territory.

Alfred Morris – Free Agency (Washington to Dallas)

Before the April draft, Morris was looking like a sly value selection. Because the Cowboys made the choice to acquire him they clearly weren't sold on what Run DMC could give them over a 16-game season. I felt it was obvious that Morris, who is a solid back, would end up as the starter. And behind that line, he could have had a career year, despite a three-year decline in yards per carry.

Now, however, things are quite different. When a running back is drafted as high as Ezekiel Elliott (No. 4 overall), the team taking him is expecting rookie of the year production right out of the gate. Sadly, that means that Morris is unlikely to be much of a fantasy factor this year. What he represents now is a sneaky long-shot opportunity. If you can afford to grab him before Elliott's owner handcuffs him, then stash him on your bench for a rainy day. If it pours on Elliott for some reason, you will suddenly have a hot commodity.

Wide Receivers

Marvin Jones – Free Agency (Cincinnati to Detroit)

The Lions definitely overpaid for Jones in what was obviously a very shallow wide receiver free agent pool. But that doesn't mean they took on a player who lacks talent. Nobody can replace Calvin Johnson, but who's asking Jones to? He has the opportunity to help define Detroit's new offense.

Stafford was actually a better quarterback when Johnson was out, because he was forced to scan the entire field for open players, which made him more efficient. Expect Jones and Golden Tate to both be strong options this year, posting 70-75 receptions and about 1,000 yards. Unless Eric Ebron develops Tyler Eifert's consistent mitts, Jones also has a chance to vastly improve on his four touchdown grabs from a year ago. The 10 scores he caught in 2013 is pushing it, but 7 to 9 are very doable.

Mohamed Sanu – Free Agency (Cincinnati to Atlanta)

Sanu will end the Falcons' search for a No. 2 wide receiver. Beyond superstar Julio Jones there's no one on the roster with as much experience or talent. He needs to get a handle on the football though. Drops have hampered his production throughout his career. In Atlanta, Sanu should slightly exceed his most productive season to date, which was in 2014 when he caught 56 passes for 790 yards and five touchdowns. He'll be a No. 3 fantasy receiver or solid flex play.

Mike Wallace – Free Agency (Minnesota to Baltimore)

After last season, Wallace had become a forgotten fantasy player for good reason. He was wasting away on a team with an offensive philosophy that didn't suit his strengths, and with a quarterback who lacked arm strength and wasn't impressively accurate on long passes.

This season will be different. With Steve Smith in his swan-song season, Wallace will take the top off defenses with Joe Flacco flinging it his way. There may be too many receiving options on this team for Wallace to surpass his career high of 73 receptions, but there is no reason he can't match or exceed the output he had in Miami in 2014 – 67 receptions for 862 yards and 10 touchdowns. He can become a sneaky No. 2 fantasy receiver this season.

Tight Ends

Coby Fleener – Free Agency (Indianapolis to New Orleans)

New Orleans has made fantasy monsters out of tight ends the last few seasons – first with Jimmy Graham, then last year with Ben Watson. Because Drew Brees quietly threw the ball farther than any other QB in the league again in 2015 (an achievement he has accomplished in four of the last five seasons) with 4,870 passing yards, I don't expect the TE success train to stop any time soon.

Fleener was caught in a perpetual timeshare with talented tight end Dwayne Allen while with the Colts. But this season he'll have the chance to barnstorm the league on a Saints' team that is perfectly happy to cater to his single skill set – receiving. The team has Michael Hoomanawanui to do the blocking, so I expect Fleener to be a starting TE fantasy player.

Ladarius Green – Free Agency (San Diego to Pittsburgh)

We don't know what Green is truly capable of because he's been obscured by the shadow of future Hall of Famer Antonio Gates for four years. Green did have his most productive season to date last year when he grabbed 37 passes for 429 yards and four scores. Gates got 56 passes for 630 yards and five touchdowns on the same team. Green will be the undisputed starter for the Steelers, and even with Antonio Brown and a gifted receiver at running back, Green should have enough opportunities in this high-octane offense to approach TE1 territory. Expect 60 receptions for about 750 yards and 8-10 scores.

Benjamin Watson – Free Agency (New Orleans to Baltimore)

Watson enjoyed a renaissance with the Saints in 2015. But there's no way he will match his 74 receptions for 825 yards and six scores this season in Baltimore. The Ravens have other tight ends on the roster able to compete with Watson for significant playing time. And Baltimore also has a burgeoning receiving corps. Watson is someone to take as your backup fantasy tight end. You can insert him into your starting lineup if your first option gets injured or underperforms.

Martellus Bennett – Trade (Chicago to New England)

Bennett only started 11 games last year, but in 2014 he had 90 receptions for 916 yards and six scores. He'll be 29 years old this year, yet he might be just the player the Patriots need to reprise their two-tight-end attack on offense. The only problem really is how many balls there will be to go around. Rob Gronkowski and Julian Edelman will get theirs. Dion Lewis will get passes out of the backfield and Danny Amendola is still there to steal receptions. If any of the above players get injured, then Bennett's fantasy role will increase. As it stands now, however, he's just a high-end backup fantasy TE.

Jared Cook – Free Agency (Los Angeles to Green Bay)

The Packers could have really used a player like Jared Cook last season. This year, he'll be part of what should be a very potent offense. As such, he may very well surpass his career high five touchdowns, but is unlikely to grab more than the 52 passes he snared in 2014. He's worth a look as a late-round backup tight end, especially since it is possible he suddenly blossoms with Aaron Rodgers as his QB.

Rebound Players

Past Failure Is Where Value Is Born

Tim Heaney, USA Today

When drafting your fantasy football team, it's rarely a good idea to pay strongly for someone coming off a career-best season.

On the flip side, taking advantage of a reduced price on a player who stank the previous season often leaves your team smelling like roses at the end of the year.

So who are the candidates worth a whiff in 2016? Let's not make things too simple by naming studs like Le'Veon Bell and Jamaal Charles -- both coming back from season-ending knee injuries -- as rebound players. They'll leave just about every draft board in the first round, anyway.

RB Eddie Lacy, Green Bay Packers

OK, here's a big name that deserves a spot here. It's all but guaranteed a healthy Lacy will be better in 2016.

Touted by many -- including this author -- as a possible No. 1 fantasy pick in 2015, Lacy instead wiped out, weighed down by fumble woes, James Starks' streaky play, and -- most of all -- his own girth, which reached embarrassing proportions and limited his mobility.

He's always had some bulk on him, but the super-sized version of Lacy could do little when he got to the line, averaging just 4.1 yards per carry. In WWE terms, he would "blow up" -- get so exhausted so quickly that he would run out of gas.

Recent social media posts of the big man, however, show a much trimmer figure -- one that could once again be explosive. He's been scouted as much more elusive than a boulder, so with restored mobility, he actually will find the right holes again.

His off-season work seems to have satisfied the leaders of the Pack, who did not draft a running back. Instead, they brought back insurance policy James Starks. They might not need him this year if Lacy gets back on track. The offensive line should improve, as well.

With Green Bay's lack of reliability in the passing game beyond Jordy Nelson -- returning from a torn ACL himself -- and Randall Cobb, Green Bay needs to strengthen the running game. A svelte Lacy should unload as a top-20 fantasy player -- one you might be able to land in Round 3.

WR Keenan Allen, San Diego Chargers

In the first eight games last year, Allen was one of fantasy's best wideouts. Despite gathering only 10.8 yards per catch, he caught 67 passes -- a whopping 75.3 percent of those Philip Rivers threw him. The Bolts were the No. 1 offense in the league for the first eight weeks.

Then, Allen's kidney was lacerated after he fell catching a touchdown in Week 8. He was placed on Injured Reserve soon after. San Diego's offense crumbled, ranking 24th the rest of the way.

He's expected to head into camp healthy, and he'll have extra motivation in the final year of his rookie contract. Allen has lost a few pounds, hoping to develop a speed threat to combine with his excellent possession abilities.

When on the field, Allen will threaten for the team's target lead every week, especially if the Chargers' run game remains putrid again. (And it might given Melvin Gordon's rehab from micro-fracture surgery.) That O-line isn't exactly run-friendly, either.

If Allen can add a downfield element, he could wind up as one of fantasy's top pass-catchers for an entire season. San Diego knows he's the key, and as long as he's healthy, they'll feed him.

Landing him in Round 4 of any format could be one of the biggest fantasy steals of the year.

WR Mike Evans, Tampa Bay Buccaneers

As a 2014 rookie, Evans unloaded with 68 catches, 1,051 yards and 12 touchdowns. That 15.5 yards-per-catch average ranked third among wideouts with 60-plus receptions. He did this playing with a combination of Josh McCown and Mike Glennon under center. That speaks volumes about the Texas A&M alum's presence.

In 2015, he delivered 74 grabs and 1,206 yards, for an even better 16.3 average that ranked second among wideouts with 70-plus receptions.

Why is he in this article, then? He mustered only three touchdowns. Much of that stems from rookie Jameis Winston, who went through some growing pains. Evans missed most of training camp and the first game of the year with a hamstring injury, which kept him from fashioning optimal chemistry with his new thrower.

Winston also was one of the worst signal callers in terms of red-zone performance. That limited Evans' potential inside the 20 -- somewhere a physical 6-5, 231-pounder like Evans should thrive.

All in all, however, Winston was decent for a rookie, and heading into their second season together, the two should start connecting more in the red zone. Dirk Koetter, moving up from offensive coordinator to head coach, remains a stellar offensive guru for quarterbacks, especially those who stand out with vertical passing.

And obviously, Evans remains one of the best at bringing in the deep ball. The third-year budding stud will creep back toward double-digit end-zone trips. Hopefully your league mates undervalue him based on his lack of six-pointers last year.

QB Andrew Luck, Indianapolis Colts

OK, so you say "Luck is a big name, too," but many might doubt whether he's worth a strong pick here in 2016. The NFL's No. 1 overall selection in 2012 logged just seven games last season, thanks to a lacerated kidney and a partially-torn abdominal muscle. He also had some dings in his ribs and shoulder.

When he was on the field, the results didn't inspire confidence, either: 55.3 completion percentage, 15 touchdowns and 12 interceptions. Luck's offensive line has let him down, but so has his penchant for turning the ball over (55 picks compared to 101 career TD tosses).

But he might've been dealt a blessing after the end of his relationship with Stanford mentor Pep Hamilton, whose conservative offensive design eventually started limiting Luck's potential. Luck only directed new OC Rob Chudzinski's offense in game action for four quarters last year before his kidney tear. So an offseason to get on the same page will help, especially since this is Luck's third different offense in five seasons.

If Luck can temper his aggressive, downfield nature, throwing more balls away in an effort to take fewer sacks and throw fewer picks, he could revisit his stellar 2014 numbers. Maybe he can even go back to being a rushing threat with a keener sense of improvisation, particularly near the goal line.

He'll enjoy a deep cache of receiving targets in T.Y. Hilton and breakout candidates Donte Moncrief and tight end Dwayne Allen, plus promising second-year pro Phillip Dorsett and talented pass-catching back Robert Turbin. A suspect Colts' running game should once again leave Luck in position to attempt at least 30-plus passes with regularity.

Don't aim for his 2014 40-touchdown season, but 30 won't require a bunch of good Lu– Well, you know. That's good enough to make him a quarterback you can draft in Round 6 or so, and he can perform like one you can land in Round 3.

WR Mike Wallace, Baltimore Ravens

Who'd have thunk that one of the league's foremost deep threats would not do much catching passes from Teddy "Checkdown" Bridgewater? Wallace followed his 10-touchdown 2014 season with a mere 39 catches, 473 yards (career-low 12.1 average) and only two scores a year ago.

Wallace made some route-running adjustments to cultivate a better game for midrange passes with the Miami Dolphins two years ago, but he's best utilized when he can just take off on a fly pattern.

There's a lot of Steve Smith Sr. in Mike Wallace. So what better guy to rein in and mold a mercurial burner than his new teammate, a much more polished, not as mercurial burner? Smith could help round Wallace's game into something that Torrey Smith would've offered. Perhaps it could be Smith's retirement gift to the Ravens.

Wallace is no slouch when things fall into place: He boasts a career 15.2 reception yardage average and has caught eight or more scores in a season four times. Baltimore needs another deep weapon, and with Breshad Perriman and Smith, there should be more capable bodies to keep defenses busy.

Also, Joe Flacco more aptly resembles the type of QB that can take advantage of Wallace's ability to get behind defenses. Wallace will feel like he did during his Steelers' days when he had Ben Roethlisberger aiming in his direction downfield.

Wallace, who turns 30 in August, still has a few years left to contribute as a field-stretching speed threat. Non-PPR owners don't have to stretch to imagine landing him at a WR4 value and watching him sneak into WR2 value many weeks.

WR Torrey Smith, San Francisco 49ers

Speaking of Smith, his signing with San Francisco produced some big games in 2015, especially since he averaged 20.1 yards per catch. But he only registered 33 of them, good for 663 yards and four touchdowns – the first two career lows, the third matching it.

Colin Kaepernick and Blaine Gabbert struggled with a schizophrenic offense. Geep Chryst out, Chip Kelly in. (Well, Curtis Modkins, but. ... Don't think for a second it's not Kelly pulling the strings.)

Smith lines up as Kelly's new Jeremy Maclin, who enjoyed a career year in Kelly's 2014 NFL sideline debut. Similarities in build (Smith 6-0, 205 pounds; Maclin 6-0, 198) and ability to challenge on deep passes should keep fantasy owners optimistic.

Just as Maclin took advantage with a career-high yards-per-reception average of 15.5, Smith will love an offense as frenetic as Kelly's, as he'll often find defensive backs off-guard. Kaepernick, for all his faults, possesses an arm that can reach him downfield.

Naturally, Smith figures more smoothly into standard scoring lineups. His value comes in the chunks of yardage he can pick up, not the frequency of his targets. Still, landing him as a third or fourth wideout on draft day will yield a big profit – perhaps 1,000-plus yards and 10-plus scores.

QB Ben Roethlisberger, Pittsburgh Steelers

You wouldn't think he belongs on this list when you consider all the highlight plays he launched in Antonio Brown's direction last year. But Big Ben missed four games after spraining the MCL in his left knee, and he looked out of sorts when he suited up, goofing on a career-high 16 interceptions despite the shortened season. He also managed only 21 touchdown tosses.

Roethlisberger, 34, realizes his window might be closing, and he's taking steps to lengthen it. He's lost at least 15 pounds this offseason to avoid turning into a Bigger version of Big Ben.

The Steelers lost talented big-play threat Martavis Bryant to a year-long suspension and security-blanket tight end Heath Miller to retirement. But Roethlisberger and offensive coordinator Todd Haley have overcome some tumultuous seasons to become best friends.

Haley and offensive line coach Mike Munchak have kept Ben comfortable in this offense and in the pocket. Ben was sacked just 20 times last year.

Brown, of course, is the league's best wideout, especially with route-running. Fantasy sleepers Markus Wheaton, Sammie Coates and "wideout in a tight end's body" Ladarius Green boast the talent to make up for losing Bryant.

The injury risk with Roethlisberger remains significant, but who cares when you can steal him in the middle to late rounds? Even with the altered personnel surrounding him, he carries top-5 upside among quarterbacks.

TE Martellus Bennett, New England Patriots

Bennett tumbled from 90 receptions in 2014 to 53 last year, also disappointing in yards (439) and touchdowns (three). That Chicago Bears' offense was a mess behind Jay Cutler's typically erratic play.

Bennett obviously isn't the No. 1 at his own position on his new club. You might remember a guy named Rob Gronkowski, who sits alone at the top of the tight ends, with fantasy's No. 2 TE – whomever that might be – far, far down the rankings.

A refresher: The Pats were a two-tight-end menace during Josh McDaniels' first stint as offensive coordinator. Aaron Hernandez' transgressions erased that, and ever since

New England has struggled to find a similarly consistent weapon. But McDaniels would love to return to that scheme in his second term.

This club's undetermined receiving hierarchy beneath Gronk starts with Julian Edelman, who's recovering from another foot surgery and might start camp late. Danny Amendola is no guarantee to stay healthy, either. Chris Hogan is a nice talent, but hardly worth counting on.

Bennett (6-6, 273 pounds) gives the Pats the best chance at diversity after Gronk and Edelman. Whether it be 16 games of Tom Brady, or Jimmy Garoppolo during Brady's suspension, this offense will enjoy having a true sidekick to Gronk again, another player who can cause matchup problems.

Bennett can be drafted as a second tight end but should produce like a starting option at a volatile position.

Sometimes Second Place Is Good Enough

Like When It's Still Worth A Million Dollars (With Another Million For Your Buddies)

We've all been there. A last minute play on Monday night. Insignificant in terms of the NFL game in question but of great import to your fantasy contest. I've won on plays like that. I've lost on plays like that. You have, too.

But few of us have experienced the drama that Jared Beisel did in Week 1 of the 2015 season.

Think back to the Monday night game that week. The San Francisco 49ers hosted the Minnesota Vikings. It was late in the game – closing in on the two-minute mark. Beisel, 25, was leading the $10 million DraftKings Millionaire Maker Contest by just over one point.

With the difference between first place – and the $2 million grand prize – and second place (with a $1 million reward), $1 million was on the line.

As ESPN.com recounted it, the game got even tighter for Beisel (who lives in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada) when 49ers running back Carlos Hyde, owned by the entrant within a point of Beisel, ran for nine yards and a first down just before the two-minute warning.

ESPN.com's Kevin Ota explained. "Had Hyde run two yards further, Beisel immediately would have lost his lead. But with only two minutes left all seemed safe as the 49ers appeared ready to take a knee. … Except they instead ran Hyde for another five yards on first down, bumping Beisel to second place."

In fact, Hyde racked up 168 rushing yards that night. But it was the final 23 yards that left Beisel 0.4 points out of first place.

Like I said, we've all been there. … But not really. Not with $1 million on the line. That's rare air indeed.

Of course, Jared will survive thanks to that $1 million second place prize. And certainly he'll be revered by his fellow owners in two ESPN.com leagues, all of whom split another $1 million as part of a special promotion between DraftKings and ESPN.

Beisel should also find considerable satisfaction in that a handful of truly outside the box lineup decisions – decisions made due to confidence in his own ability to predict anticipated game flow – were true difference makers for him.

Anybody else back in Week 1 last year rolling with Benny Cunningham and Darren Sproles?

We caught up with Jared this offseason and asked him about the experience.

CS: How did you first hear about daily fantasy games and what drew you in?

JB: I first heard about it on Facebook last year and thought it sounded interesting. What drew me in was I was looking for a new way to bet on sports, and I'd always loved fantasy sports from a very young age. So I knew this would be right up my alley.

CS: How skilled a daily player did you consider yourself upon getting involved?

JB: I figured to be one of the best that wasn't playing on a site. I've had success since I was 12 years old and have always felt I benefited from a unique outlook on how to be successful at fantasy sports.

CS: How successful were you prior to the 2015 season?

JB: I had some good wins but nothing crazy in terms of fantasy games. I remember doing really well in a hockey pool when I was 12, but didn't win more than $500.

CS: Your big haul came early in the season. Week 1, in fact. Set up the circumstances for us.

JB: I was at a crappy party in Edmonton, and boredom drove me to creating a lineup. I got lucky to be in the circumstances I was in going into Monday night with Julio Jones, Jordan Matthews, Darren Sproles and the Vikings' defense. I was in the top 5,000 at that point.

CS: Run me through the roster you played that weekend and highlight some of the key decisions in setting it up.

JB: The whole team was based on the notion that Rams running back Tre Mason wasn't going to be playing. If that was the case, Benny Cunningham was my sleeper. I knew he could catch the football, and he'd be a valuable but cheap option as a PPR back.

CS: What specific strategies played into those decisions? Was there a single approach that stands out in your mind?

JB: It all came down to the PPR scoring that DraftKings uses. I re-did one of the five teams I entered because I didn't have enough time to edit. I pretty much did it picking players that good preseasons. Specifically, I looked for guys who led the league in targets.

CS: The outcome of this one wasn't determined early. It was late. As in late Monday night. And while you won $1 million, there was another million on the line and it all came right down to the wire. Can you tell us how you handled the break from Sunday to Monday?

JB: I didn't sleep really because I knew the team was special. I was winning the $2 million up until the very last play of the game. Carlos Hyde should never have been in that game that late – just kidding, of course. I lost by 3 yards. The winner picked up 16 points on the last four plays to ice the game.

CS: Talk a little bit about the pressure and how you held up during that San Francisco-Minnesota game with so much at stake.

JB: I wasn't too nervous because it didn't seem like the money was actually real. I know that sounds dumb, but I was really numb to the situation. If I had truly comprehended what was on the line, I would have been sweatier than Shaq at the free-throw line against the Blazers in 2000.

CS: Can you tell me some of the personal highlights of the weekend? And at what point did you realize you had a realistic shot at a seven-figure prize?

JB: Well, the party I mentioned before was horrible. I was sober. I didn't like anybody there all that much so I left early and walked home. I was bored out of my mind. I called about 10 friends – none of whom answered. I finally fell asleep and got up early the next morning and created the team 10 minutes before kickoff. The reason I had so many players in the Atlanta-Philadelphia game was my expectation that Atlanta would go up big before halftime and that Julio Jones would be a major reason. Picking a third string running back was another thing. The Eagles falling behind would be the reason that Sproles came in, and he came in and ended up having a big impact. I predicted that game perfectly, and it really helped CS: You won what most of us would consider "life-changing" money. Now that we're well past the win, tell me about that angle; is it what you expected?

JB: I have a lot of time and more freedom now. But I'm no happier than I was before the win. I was just poorer.

CS: The DraftKings contest you won was part of a promotion that paid an additional $1 million which was split between all your league mates in a season-long ESPN.com league. Would it be a reach to say you're held in great esteem by that group?

JB: Oh, yeah.

CS: Will you continue to be a daily game player going forward?

JB: Yes and no. I don't want to be a "professional," but I am very excited for the Masters.

JB: I left $10,000 in my account at DraftKings after I won.

CS: Where do you feel you stand now, in light of that success? What kind of player do you view yourself as?

JB: If I put the time into it, I feel I could be one of the best. But I'm not a math genius who creates algorithms to build lineups. I'll never be that guy.

CS: Can you tell readers what you believe it takes in terms of time, effort and understanding the strategies involved to gain a competitive advantage?

JB: I think as long as you don't fall in love with it or become obsessed with it, you can be successful. But you do have to know and understand football. You need to be able to go deep. Little things. Details. Like looking at players going up against former teams, knowing it's a revenge game. Play hunches if you hear a player hit the town hard the night before or some other tidbit. It goes deeper than just looking at stats.

CS: What are some specific tactics, tools or techniques you could share with readers?

JB: I always predict how the game will go first. In my opinion, you don't have a chance of winning if you don't come close to correctly predicting game flow and outcome. You don't want your guy pulled after the first half because it's a blowout. Or if the defense is doing the scoring when you felt it would be the offense.

CS: Are there any resources you'd like to share that you find especially helpful?

JB: I study a wide range of info, but I never use other people's lineups or picks.

CS: Will you continue to play in season-long leagues to the same degree you have in the past?

JB: Yes. Entertainment is the most important part of season-long leagues. I was in a 14-man league and ended up getting the whole Patriots' offense year. They scored like 100 points a game for me and took me all the way to the final. It was more fun for me to watch like that so, so that's the kind of thing I like about season-long.

CS: Highlight the major differences between daily and season-long? Specifically, what aspect of the two versions do you like most and like least about each?

JB: Season-long is all about free agency. If you keep the same team all year because you're afraid of trading and making moves, your teams will suck. That's my belief. Daily is all matchups whereas season-long is a grind. If you can hit the waiver-wire faster than your league mates you're golden.

CS: Where do you see the future of Daily Fantasy Sports going?

JB: I see a good future. I think it'll be big for a long time. Hopefully the government will get their act together. The United States shouldn't punish the people for having too much fun.

Millionaire Maker Strategy: A CLOSER LOOK

Jen Ryan
FootballDiehards.com

During Week 1 of the 2015 football season DraftKings' first Millionaire Maker contest awarded a total of $10 million in prizes. This was the largest paying contest to date. Two people became millionaires that day with first place winning $2 million and second place winning $1 million. While I cannot imagine the anguish of missing out on $2 million dollars, I can definitely – and often do – imagine the euphoria of taking home a $1 million prize. It is a dream I chase every Sunday during football season and a dream that came true for Jared Beisel last year when he finished with the second best score in the Week 1 Millionaire Maker pool. Let's look at Jared's winning lineup and analyze how he beat hundreds of thousands of other daily lineups, becoming a million dollars richer that Sunday.

QB – Marcus Mariota, $6,000 – 4 PaTD, 209 PaYds, 6 RuYds – 1% Owned

Mariota was an enormous fade in his first professional start as his Tennessee Titans were a home underdog against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. His four-touchdown performance resulted in 24.96 points, and Mariota finished behind only Carson Palmer and Tony Romo. Twenty-one quarterbacks were priced higher than the rookie but his value exceeded theirs by nearly ten points. The only QB who carried more risk in Week 1 was fellow rookie Jameis Winston, and (obviously) Beisel's super-risky, but sneaky, contrarian play payed off.

RB – Benny Cunningham, $3,000 – 77 RecYds, 45 RuYds, 4 REC – 3.5% Owned

In terms of running back pricing $3,000 is the absolute bottom of the barrel. Not many people played Cunningham in that Week 1 slate, but with Todd Gurley opening the season on the PUP list and Tre Mason not expected to play, it made perfect sense to slot Cunningham in the lineup. The pass-catching specialist racked up 77 yards on four receptions, and his 16.2 points were more than fair value for a player at his cost.

RB – Matt Forte, $7,800 – 1 RuTD, 25 RecYds, 141 RuYds, 5 REC, 1 100+Rush – 5.3% owned

The only running back that would have cost Beisel more money in Week 1 was Jamaal Charles. For a top-priced back playing at home with a 50 point over/under line it is surprising that Forte's ownership was so low. Week 1 was the former Bears' best week of the 2015 season, and his only 30-plus point fantasy game. Beisel struck gold paying up for him.

WR – Keenan Allen, $7,100 – 166 RecYds, 15 REC, 1 100+Rec – 2.1% owned

Philip Rivers' top target was criminally under-owned in his season debut, and Allen absolutely went off. Antonio Gates was serving a four-game suspension at the time, so it is a bit of a head-scratcher trying to rationalize his low ownership. The Chargers were home favorites against the Detroit Lions, and the game ended with a San Diego victory – the 33-28 final score even exceeded the huge 45.5 point over/under. Allen's 15 receptions were a career best.

WR – Julio Jones, $9,300 – 2 RecTD, 141 RecYds, 9REC, 1 100+ Rec – 21.8% owned

Jones was not just the highest-priced receiver in Week 1, he was the top-priced player overall. At nearly 22% ownership, he was the chalk of the weekend but was worth paying for, as this game against Philadelphia had the week's highest over/under total at 55.5 points. Beisel captured the first of Jones' four 30-plus point weeks in 2015 and the first of his nine 100-plus yard performances as the Falcon superstar notched another top-tier season.

WR – Jordan Matthews, $7,100 – 102 RecYds, 10 REC, 1 100+Rec – 17.1% owned

Projecting Chip Kelly's game script, Philadelphia's fast-paced, high-octane offense was expected to put up points in the Georgia Dome, as reflected in the aforementioned 55.5 point over/under line. Matthews was the beneficiary of 13 targets, most of any offensive player on either team but he didn't find the end zone. Although Matthews hit value, he was just a touchdown away from paying really big dividends.

TE – Tyler Eifert, $3,500 – 2 RecTD, 104 RecYds, 9 REC, 1 100+Rec – 3.9% owned

Once again Beisel picked the right player at the right time as Week 1 was Eifert's only 30-plus point game and was the only week you could roster him for less than $4,000. Andy Dalton targeted his tight end a season-high 12 times in the Bengals' 33-13 road win in Oakland. Eight tight ends not named Rob Gronkowski (the Patriots played in the Thursday night Kickoff game that week) were more expensive than Eifert, yet it was the Bengal who finished as the top-scoring tight end in the Millionaire Maker.

RB – Darren Sproles, $3,300 – 76 RecYds, 50 RuYds, 7 REC – 4.3% owned

After years of consistent fantasy production, Sproles has become mainly a role player used on passing downs. In Week 1, however, he moonlighted as the Eagles' best fantasy player, outrushing DeMarco Murray and finishing as the second-highest target in the passing game behind Jordan Matthews. Murray was more widely rostered (by 23.6% of the field) but in true zig/zag fashion Beisel chose to roster Sproles instead. With the Eagles playing from behind, Sproles' seven receptions for 76 yards were his best output of the season, and came at a fraction of Murray's salary.

DST – Vikings, $2,800 – 1 SACK, 1 DFR, 1 14-20 PA, 1 BLK – 3.4% owned

The Vikings' DST needed a defensive fumble recovery and a blocked field goal just to finish with six points in Week 1. Paying higher salaries for offensive skill players can sometimes leave you having to simply pick the cheapest defensive team with the best matchup. In a way, for Beisel, his $2,800 investment in Minnesota ended up costing him a million dollars.

Beisel's closest competitor owned San Francisco running back Carlos Hyde and on the final play before the two-minute warning in this Monday night finale, Hyde ran for nine yards to the Vikings' 36-yard line. Even with that gain Beisel still held on to first place by one point and looked destined to be the winner as San Francisco would likely kneel and let the clock run, protecting their 17-point lead. To quote Kevin Ota from ESPN.com: "Had Hyde run two yards further, Beisel immediately would have lost his lead. But with only two minutes left all seemed safe as the 49ers appeared ready to take a knee."

As any fantasy player will tell you, no contest is over until the clock reads 0:00. (And sometimes they aren't over until stat corrections are processed, but I digress…) Coming out of the two-minute warning the Niners handed off to Hyde who burst through the middle for a five-yard gain. And just like that, Jared Beisel lost and won $1 million at the same time.

So many factors contributed to Beisel's success in that fruitful Week 1 Millionaire Maker. Finishing near the top in a GPP (Guaranteed Prize Pool) contest with 572,500 total entries cannot be done without a perfect storm, but there are a few strategies Beisel employed which can be applied to building your DraftKings lineup each week.

The importance of using Las Vegas to your advantage when constructing a lineup cannot be stressed enough. Vegas profits millions upon millions of dollars on sporting contest outcomes for a reason: the house knows best. It is beneficial and logical to analyze what Vegas predicts for each game when considering which players to use. Underdog teams are expected to lose and are very likely to play from behind. Beisel rostered Mariota, Cunningham, Forte, Sproles and Matthews – all underdogs in their season openers. Five of his players were on teams playing in games with projected point totals of at least 45 points. Targeting the large point totals and predicting the game by spreads are a key component of roster construction.

Beisel chose to pay up for top receivers on his roster. DraftKings utilizes a PPR-scoring format and Beisel stated that players with large target shares were the basis of his lineup strategy. Jones came into the 2015 season as the third-highest targeted receiver the previous year. The San Diego Chargers were without Antonio Gates, and it was safe to assume Allen would absorb a decent percentage of Gates' targets. Jordan Matthews was a WR1 who would figure to see a ton of targets in the game with the highest over/under total that week. In PPR leagues targets are the foundation of fantasy scoring. They create opportunity, and opportunity combined with efficiency creates points. The more targets a player converts, the more points they score.

In building his lineup, Beisel also spent for a top running back, specifically one who catches a lot of passes. Forte has always been a PPR stud and has always been game-flow agnostic. He rarely comes off the field and was worth paying for in a game where the Bears needed to keep up with the Green Bay Packers. The same could be said for Darren Sproles who paid off big-time in the flex position. Beisel had a feeling the Eagles would be playing from behind and that Sproles would receive a heavy dose of targets. When a team is projected to play from behind, the "two-minute drill back" (like Sproles) can be a smart addition to your roster.

After paying up for his studs Beisel hit pay-dirt as he chose the scrubs to fill out his roster. In addition to the play-from-behind running back, another tactic worth considering is taking a shot on a cheap player with an opportunity presented to him by injury. This was the case with the Rams' Benny Cunningham. Tre Mason was declared out for Week 1, and the majority of DraftKings players were too wary to play him against the Seahawks' touted defense. When a backup gets an opportunity to start it is typically not going to be reflected in that backup player's salary. Injury replacements are a low-cost, high-risk, high-reward strategy.

We hear the phrase "contrarian" thrown around a lot in daily fantasy conversations, and the contrarian approach can be a money maker. When respected analysts put out their projections or mention certain players, those players typically become overexposed with higher ownership percentages. Beisel says that he never uses other peoples' lineups or picks. Mariota, the fade of the week at 1 percent ownership, finished as a top-3 quarterback. Tyler Eifert was rostered by only 3.9% of the field, and Beisel was ahead of the Eifert hype train before his salary inflated in the following weeks. The only players in his lineup with double-digit ownership percentages were Julio Jones and Jordan Matthews. Every other player on his roster were zags to the other contestants' zigs. This contrarian philosophy might be the largest contributor to Beisel's million-dollar payday.

I am a huge proponent of playing opposing receivers from games with high Vegas over/under totals. Beisel nailed it, paying up for Julio Jones and Jordan Matthews, who were matched against each other in the first Monday night game. In a high-scoring shootout the quarterbacks on both sides throw the ball all over the place. A large amount of those targets will naturally be thrown in the direction of the WR1. When the projection for a 50-plus point game between two teams with elite wideouts presents itself, it is optimal to play both receivers.

Finally, the Vikings' defense played in the second Monday night game. Typically I reserve my flex spot for the last game of the week in case I need to make any adjustments, but having the Vikings late on Monday night kept Beisel in the contest. When it comes to cashing big in a GPP tournament the outcome often comes down to mere fractions of points. Beisel was involved until the final plays of the week's last game, as was his opponent.

The biggest takeaway from Beisel's million-dollar night was that he played the lineup he built. He used his own intuition and did not choose a lineup or players touted by anyone else. He did his research and utilized strategies in predicting game flow, chasing targets, and rostering an injury replacement. Beisel was just a casual player who entered this contest because he believed in his abilities and enjoyed playing fantasy sports. Ultimately, what we can all learn from Beisel is, if you put the work in, get a little creative, take risks and trust in your process you too will have a shot at all of the stars aligning. … And it could make you rich.

Young Guns:

Players Set to Make the Leap to Fantasy Stardom in 2016

By Gary Davenport, Bleacher Report Fantasy Football Analyst

"I'm youth, I'm joy. I'm a little bird that has broken out of the egg."* – James M. Barrie

Poetic, ain't it? Didn't know you'd be getting your culture on by purchasing a fantasy football magazine, did ya'?

Just in case you were wondering, Barrie is a Scottish novelist and playwright who's most well-known for creating the character of Peter Pan. Seeing as how he died in 1937 (Barrie, not Peter Pan), it's unlikely he was ever big on fantasy football – although it's fun to imagine him talking up Tuffy Leemans as a potential sleeper.

Yes, Tuffy Leemans was a real guy. Yes, I have now veered wayyy off-topic.

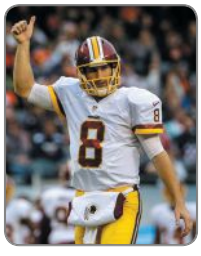
What was the topic, anyway? Oh, yeah! Youth.

Savvy fantasy owners know that the later you get in drafts, the younger you should get with your draft picks. This isn't to say that the "10 percent off at IHOP" set doesn't have a place on your fantasy football team. Players like New Orleans Saints quarterback Drew Brees, Minnesota Vikings running back Adrian Peterson and Arizona Cardinals wideout Larry Fitzgerald may be old, but they aren't dead – as evidenced by their top-10 fantasy finishes a year ago.

However, success in fantasy football is all about harvesting upside, finding players who are poised to vastly outperform their draft slots, and tabbing young up-and-comers on the verge of breakout seasons.

And wouldn't you know it – that just so happens to be what this article is about. Ain't that convenient?

Kirk Cousins – QB, Washington Redskins (ADP: Round 10, QB15)



You can make a pretty strong argument that Cousins has already made the leap. From Week 10 on last year, while leading the Redskins on an improbable run to the NFC East championship, Cousins threw 19 touchdown passes against only four interceptions. Only once over that span did Cousins post a passer rating under 100. And most importantly, during that same timespan (Weeks 10-16) Cousins ranked fourth among fantasy quarterbacks.

And yet, the fifth-year veteran is being selected well outside starter territory in 12-team fantasy football leagues.

Cousins told Liz Clarke of the Washington Post that his goal this year is simple – pick up where he left off in 2015. "What we're talking about is sustained success," Cousins said. "The last time the Redskins won back-to-back division titles was the early-to-mid-'80s [1983-84], so we'd love to be able to develop sustained success, where it's not just a one-year flash in the pan."

Sustained fantasy success is a real possibility as well. The Redskins not only didn't lose any notable offensive skill players (other than tailback Alfred Morris), but the receiving corps got a substantial boost with the addition of rookie first-round pick Josh Doctson.

If you're the type of fantasy owner who likes to wait at quarterback on draft day, Cousins is a player who should absolutely be on your radar – a platoon/backup option who has already demonstrated top-5 potential.

Duke Johnson – RB, Cleveland Browns (ADP: Round 7, RB34)

There are a number of young tailbacks who could have merited consideration here. Both Matt Jones of the Redskins and Jay Ajayi of the Miami Dolphins enter 2016 as the presumptive lead backs for teams that didn't do a whole lot in free agency or the draft to challenge that status. But both of those players are also going in the first five rounds of early drafts at Fantasy Football Calculator, so we'll dig a bit deeper.

And when it comes to digging, you can't get much deeper than the canyon of misery the Browns have carved in Cleveland.

For many fantasy owners, the Browns are persona non grata – a Dumpster fire of a football team that finished 25th in the NFL in total offense last year. However, the arrival of new head coach Hue Jackson should portend improvement in that regard, and, according to ESPN's Pat McManamon, Jackson sees Johnson as more than just a third-down back.

"Jackson sees Johnson as an every-down back," McManamon wrote. "The previous coaching staff actually felt the same. They started training camp intending to make Johnson the starter. But a hamstring pull set him back, and then he was sidelined by a concussion."

Frankly, even if Johnson doesn't beat out Isaiah Crowell and simply serves in the same role he did last season as a rookie he's a good bet to outplay this slot in PPR formats. If Johnson (who is more talented and explosive than Crowell) can wrest away the featured back role in training camp? He'll destroy it.

Kenneth Dixon – RB, Baltimore Ravens (ADP: Round 13, RB52)

When the Ravens selected Dixon out of Louisiana Tech in the fourth round of the 2016 NFL Draft, the pick met with the hearty approval of the NFL Network's Mark Dulgerian. "Dixon is a perfect fit in Marc Trestman's offense," Dulgerian said. "He is the best pass catching back in this class and possesses the toughness and instincts to pick up yards between the tackles. He should be an instant-impact player in this offense."

Still, given Dixon's paltry ADP it appears fantasy owners aren't expecting much of an instant impact. And on many levels it isn't hard to blame them. After all, talented though he may be, Dixon enters his first NFL season third on the depth chart, behind veteran Justin Forsett and second-year pro Buck Allen.

However, look a little more closely at that depth chart and room for optimism begins to grow. Yes, Forsett had an outstanding season for the Ravens two years ago. But he's a 30-year-old journeyman tailback coming off a season ending injury who has all of one big year on his NFL resume.

Allen may have been a nice late-season waiver add after Forsett got hurt, but his fantasy effectiveness did not translate into NFL accolades. He averaged less than four yards a carry, and Pro Football Focus ranked Allen as the NFL's sixth-worst tailback running the ball.

Long story short? Dixon's the most talented back on the roster, and the smart money says the Ravens figure that out sooner rather than later.

DeVante Parker – WR, Miami Dolphins (ADP: Round 7, WR31)

Parker's rookie season got off to a sluggish start compliments of a bum flipper, but by the end of the year the newest pass-catching Dolphin was doing swimmingly. Over the last three weeks of the 2015 season, Parker reeled in 13 passes for 276 yards and a score, ranking inside the top-20 PPR wideouts over that span.

Now, with a full offseason to prepare, Bucky Brooks of NFL.com thinks Parker is ready to take the next step under new head coach Adam Gase. "Based on Parker's talent," Brooks said, "he will be one of the focal points of the passing game. With Jarvis Landry playing in the slot and possibly getting double-teamed, Parker will win a number of one-on-one matchups, and I fully expect him to have 1,000 yards and eight touchdowns by season's end."

ESPN's Mike Clay beat the same drum from a fantasy perspective. "Parker is a candidate for massive target numbers if," Clay said, "as expected, new coach Adam Gase slots him into the Demaryius Thomas/Alshon Jeffery role in his offense. Parker is an obvious 2016 breakout player."

Clay beat me out in 2013 for the FSWA Web Article of the Year (Bitter? Me? Stop it.), so obviously he's some kind of genius. Kidding aside, the writing is all over the wall for a top 20 season from Parker – and yet he's still coming off draft boards as a middling fantasy WR3.

Markus Wheaton – WR, Pittsburgh Steelers (ADP: Round 9, WR43)

The season-long suspension of teammate Martavis Bryant was a blow to the Pittsburgh offense, but fellow wideout Markus Wheaton admitted to Mark Kaboly of The Pittsburgh Tribune-Review there is a silver lining of sorts – more opportunities for players like him.

"This opens up a lot more opportunities, but it (stinks) that he is not out here," Wheaton said. "We wish Martavis was here. Only thing we can do is move on. We have a lot of hungry, willing and able guys."

Despite the loss of their home-run hitter, quarterback Ben Roethlisberger hasn't backed off his intention for the Steelers to become the 30th team in NFL history to average 30 points a game – a mark the Steelers have never hit. "It is still our goal," Roethlisberger said. "We were close last year, but we didn't get there."

Listen, I'm not going to sit here and say that Wheaton is any sort of mortal lock for a huge season in 2016. There's been much made of the former Oregon State standout's potential since Pittsburgh took him in the third round of the 2013 NFL draft. Last year's 44 receptions, 749 yards and five touchdowns all were career bests, and those aren't numbers that start knees to knocking.

But it isn't just a matter of Bryant's ban. The retirement of long-time tight end Heath Miller also creates a hole in the Steelers' passing game, and while they added Ladarius Green the field-stretching tight end has had all sorts of problems staying on the field.

Wheaton is just the sort of upside WR4 fantasy owners should target in the later rounds – especially in a contract year.

Clive Walford – TE, Oakland Raiders (ADP: Round 14, TE24)

The tight end position has become a maddening mess for fantasy owners in recent years. There are a handful of dependable weekly starters, followed by a steaming pile of "meh." Everyone's looking for that late-round lottery ticket who might emerge to become a startable option.

One of the leading candidates to be that guy is second-year tight end Clive Walford, who Mike Mayock of the NFL Network talked up in 2015 when the Raiders made him the No. 2 tight end taken. "(He's) the most explosive tight end in this year's draft," Mayock said.

Walford's 28 catches for 329 yards and three scores may not appear to bear that out, but as Neil Dutton of Gridiron Experts pointed out, it's often in their second season when tight ends come into their own.

"Since the year 2000," Dutton said, "30 second-year tight ends have posted more than 500 receiving yards with two topping 1,000 (Rob Gronkowski and Jimmy Graham in 2011). Ten had at least 63 receptions (Graham had 99), and 15 had six or more touchdowns (Gronk's 17 are an NFL single season record for a tight end)."

Yes, Walford still has Mychal Rivera to beat out for the starting job. And he'll have to make the most of the opportunity if he does. But it isn't that hard to imagine him doing both – especially for the fantasy draft cost of a bag of Fritos.

Leveraging the 2016 NFL Schedule

In fantasy football, it's important to get a leg up any time an opportunity presents itself. Looking at the upcoming schedule before you head into your fantasy draft is a very effective way of doing just that. This article will evaluate some key players' 2016 schedules and will help you find the best values for your fantasy roster.

Aaron Rodgers may be the greatest quarterback in the NFL, but you can find much better value at quarterback later in your draft. During the fantasy playoffs (Weeks 13-16), Rodgers will face my first-, fourth- and fifth-ranked passing defenses.

Andrew Luck is in a similar situation to Rodgers. He might not have enough lucky beard to satisfy all of his owners during the fantasy playoff run. Weeks 13, 14 and 15 will see him facing off against my first-, fifth- and sixth-ranked defenses.

Eli Manning's career has been filled with highs and lows. I expect 2016 will fall under the "highs," when it's all said and done. Not only does the NFL's last remaining Manning have an ideal schedule, he also has the opportunity to play with his most dangerous receiving threat at tight end since Jeremy Shockey. Jerrell Adams isn't polished, but he projects to be a player that Manning can shred defenses with. An impressive receiving group of Odell Beckham Jr., Victor Cruz, Sterling Shepard and Roger Lewis help Manning's value as well.

Joe Flacco is another quarterback that I would buy 2016 stock in. He has a favorable schedule, especially during your fantasy playoff run. Steve Smith, Sr., Mike Wallace, and Kamar Aiken will complement each other and Flacco well. Smith is hungry to leave his legacy in what will very likely be his last NFL season. Wallace is eager to prove his doubters wrong after disappointing seasons in Miami and Minnesota. Reminiscent of Wallace's first NFL QB (Ben Roethlisberger), Flacco has the deep ball accuracy that both Ryan Tannehill and Teddy Bridgewater lacked. Aiken was thrown into the fire of a starting role in 2015 but stood up to the heat. He now becomes a valuable asset as the Ravens' third receiver.

Quick Hitters

Ride Carson Palmer through the first four weeks of the season and then sell high before things get tough Week 5.

Robert Griffin III is worth taking a flyer on. Great schedule, young weapons and a quarterback "guru" could combine to create something that might resemble Griffin's amazing 2012 season.

Feel like rolling the dice? Tony Romo will not face a defense ranked higher than 20th in my fantasy defensive rankings during the playoff weeks. Can he stay healthy?

Blake Bortles will be strong out of the gate, but sell high during the season as the fantasy playoff schedule will be brutal for the third-year quarterback.

Up for a two-for-one? I'd partner Kirk Cousins with Ben Roethlisberger. Cousins has a cake schedule up until Washington's Week 9 bye, and Roethlisberger will start to benefit from the schedule after the Steelers' bye. Go along with Cousins the first eight games and then ride Roethlisberger home to the championship from there on.

Sophomore Slumps

There are four running backs heading into Year 2 of their NFL careers that have high expectations, but I would look in another direction.

David Johnson had me raving during the 2015 NFL Draft season and lived up to it during his rookie campaign. However, he'll face my first-, second- and third-ranked rushing defenses in consecutive weeks between Weeks 6 and 8. The sour cherry on top comes during championship week when he faces my No. 1-ranked rushing defense again.

Todd Gurley is already a star. In 2016 he'll face a brutal schedule, including a tough playoff run, plus he'll be lining up behind a rookie quarterback in a new city as the franchise moves to Los Angeles. That's a stacked deck for the second-year back.

Jay Ajayi is an underrated back, but he won't get the chance to put his best foot forward in 2016 as he'll face teams ranked in my top-13 against the run in 11 of his 16 games.

Thomas Rawls exploded on the scene last year and is expected to put on a repeat performance in 2016. I have concerns with not only his tough schedule during the fantasy playoff weeks, but also with the fact that rookies C.J. Prosise and Alex Collins will take some of his reps. Plus, Christine Michael just seems to have a knack for sticking around. And don't overlook the concerns with the Seahawks' offensive line.

Two Rookies and One Legend

The most talented running back in Baltimore is easily rookie Kenneth Dixon. He'll have a beneficial schedule and will provide great draft value as most fantasy owners are passing him by in favor of more well-known backs.

Ezekiel Elliott won't slide in fantasy drafts, but he'll still live up to his value. Not only will he be running behind one of the league's best offensive lines, he also faces one of the most favorable schedules for running backs.

Adrian Peterson is one of the three best running backs of all-time (Barry Sanders / Jim Brown). As the hourglass continues to drain towards the end of his storied career, the Vikings' schedule lines up perfectly for another stellar showing. It also helps that quarterback Teddy Bridgewater has another year of experience and the team added more weapons at receiver which will pull defenders from the box. Minnesota also invested in their offensive line this offseason, and that will pay huge dividends.

Steals

Ameer Abdullah is part of a crowded backfield and didn't really blow people's socks off in 2015. Don't write him off just yet, though. He has a beautiful schedule and the Lions could shift Riley Reiff back to the right side and allow rookie tackle Taylor Decker to play on Matthew Stafford's blind side. That would stack up to be one of their better lines in several years. Abdullah could be this year's version of Devonta Freeman.

Paul Perkins has the opportunity to run away with the Giants' starting job in 2016 since none of the team's backs seized the role in 2015. The Giants' backfield has plenty of competition, but Perkins is the most talented of the group and will face a favorable schedule. Perkins will be available late in your fantasy drafts, but will produce like an early-round selection.

Jordan Howard will have to prove that he can shoulder the workload in Chicago. Many people will expect Jeremy Langford to have a breakout season against a weak schedule, but it'll be Howard that takes full advantage.

When to Trade Away / For

Latavius Murray should be a rock star out of the gate. He'll run behind an insane offensive line and has a beneficial schedule, but try to deal him before the first eight games pass you by. Sell high.

Matt Forte could be an ideal candidate to trade for when you look to move Murray. This way you don't take the risk of drafting the 30-year-old Forte just to see him get injured, and he has a tough schedule during the first six weeks. If he remains healthy after those first six games, look to acquire him and enjoy Forte's playoff schedule against my 31st-, 30th- and 21st-ranked run defenses Weeks 13-15.

Eddie Lacy has a point to prove in 2016. The schedule starts well for him, so go ahead and use a draft pick on him, but be prepared to ship him out before the playoff run that will see him face three top-10 run defenses.

Doug Martin has a brutal first five games and hits the bye in Week 6. I wouldn't draft Martin, however, if you have the depth at running back to trade for him during his bye week, his owner will likely be frustrated at his lack of production during the first five games and looking to trade for someone who is active Week 6. Pounce!

Matt Jones is sitting in a perfect spot in Washington -- tons of weapons around him and a nice schedule during the first seven games. Then, in Weeks 8 through 10, he'll face the eighth- and the ninth-ranked rushing defenses sandwiched around the team's Week 9 Bye. He'll also see two top-5 rushing defenses in the playoffs. Draft him, ride high for a couple of months and then move him.

LeSean McCoy will have a brutal schedule to start the season. He'll also turn 28 over the summer. Don't risk using a draft pick on an older back, especially one with talented backs sitting behind him on the depth chart. If McCoy is still healthy come Week 12, swoop in and add him to benefit from the Bill's cake fantasy playoff run.

TRENDS THAT YOU CANNOT IGNORE

Brandon Marianne Lee, Pro Football Focus and Her Fantasy Football

Times, they are a changing…

After every season you hear fantasy players from every corner of the globe saying, "Wow, I didn't see that coming." Perhaps no year was more complex, unpredictable or downright infuriating as 2015. Injuries took superstar players off the table, backups came in and became stars, and teams with capable running backs only gave them nine carries a game. (I'm talking to you, Miami!)

As we look forward to the 2016 season, we can't simply write off 2015 as an anomaly. There were very distinct trends that solidified their existence in our game. It's time to take notice. It's time to embrace change and progress in order to be the most aware fantasy players we can.

Stop avoiding rushing quarterbacks.

For a long time, fantasy players far and wide held the belief that a quarterback that runs the ball opens himself up for injuries and therefore you should opt for the safer pocket passer when you draft your team.

If you continue to think like this, you will miss out on points. A lot of points.

Cam Newton was the No. 1 fantasy quarterback last year. He led all quarterbacks in carries (132), rushing yards (636) and rushing touchdowns (10). But he also tied for second in the league for passing touchdowns (35).

Cam Newton has only missed two games in his five-year career. One of those absences was due to a car accident.

"But Cam is huge! He's different."

Okay, what about 5-11 Russell Wilson? He's rushed for at least 489 yards in every season and has yet to miss a game in his whole four-year career.

Blake Bortles hasn't missed a snap as a starter, and he averages 3.6 carries per game.

Of the top-5 rushing quarterbacks during the 2015 season, only Tyrod Taylor missed games. Before you declare Marcus Mariota a rushing quarterback, consider that he only averaged 2.8 carries per game -- that's fewer than Andy Dalton. Only four times all season did the Titans' rookie post more than three carries in a game.

Injuries can happen to anyone. Even the mighty pocket passer Drew Brees got hurt last season. Don't let that deter you.

Bonus Tip: Last year 11 quarterbacks threw for 30 plus touchdowns. Only one player has done it three years in a row: Drew Brees.

The rushing yards are going down…a lot. And good luck predicting who will suffer for it.

Last year seven running backs rushed for over 1,000 yards. None of those players did it the year before. Zero.

Thirteen running backs went over 1,000 yards in 2014 but not one of them repeated those numbers. None. (To be fair, Adrian Peterson sat out the majority of the 2014 season. He probably would have been the only repeat.)

Of the 20 total running backs that have gone over 1,000 rushing yards in the last two years, eight of those backs have only accomplished the feat once in their career.

If we combine receiving yards and instead highlight the players with 1,000+ all-purpose yards last season, we would include the following group of players: David Johnson, Lamar Miller, Mark Ingram, Jonathan Stewart, Frank Gore, Matt Forte, DeMarco Murray, LeSean McCoy, Rashad Jennings, T.J. Yeldon, Danny Woodhead, Charles Sims, Giovani Bernard and DeAngelo Williams. Some of those names might surprise you, and some of them will be steals in your upcoming fantasy draft.

It's okay to admit that we no longer live in a world of workhorse running backs. We simply need to look deeper, farther down the list, and perhaps focus on wide receivers in the early rounds.

Bonus Tip: Since signing with San Diego in 2014, Danny Woodhead has averaged 4.6 receptions per game, and in the two seasons where he played all 16 games, he put up over 1,000 all-purpose yards. His current ADP puts him in the seventh round.

Consistent wide receivers are necessary for your success. Waiting will hurt you.

Success repeats itself when you're talking about a wide receiver. This is the simple explanation for the "zero RB" trend. Here is a list of all the receivers that went over 1,000 yards in 2015, and the number of times they have achieved that milestone in their career:

Player	Team	2015 yardage	No. of 1,000+ yd seasons
Julio Jones	ATL	1,871	3 of 5 seasons
Antonio Brown	PIT	1,841	4 of 6 seasons
DeAndre Hopkins	HOU	1,521	2 of 3 seasons
Brandon Marshall	NYJ	1,502	8 of 10 seasons
Odell Beckham Jr.	NYG	1,454	2 of 2 seasons
Allen Robinson	JAC	1,400	1 of 2 seasons
Demaryius Thomas	DEN	1,304	4 of 6 seasons
A.J. Green	CIN	1,297	5 of 5 seasons
Larry Fitzgerald	ARI	1,215	7 of 12 seasons
Calvin Johnson	DET	1,214	7 of 9 seasons
Mike Evans	TB	1,211	2 of 2 seasons
Jarvis Landry	MIA	1,157	1 of 2 seasons
Brandin Cooks	NO	1,138	1 of 2 seasons
Emmanuel Sanders	DEN	1,135	2 of 6 seasons
T. Y. Hilton	IND	1,124	3 of 4 seasons
Jeremy Maclin	KC	1,088	2 of 6 seasons
Amari Cooper	OAK	1,082	1 of 1 seasons
Doug Badwin	SEA	1,069	1 of 5 seasons
Sammy Watkins	BUF	1,047	1 of 2 seasons
Allen Hurns	JAC	1,030	1 of 2 seasons
Eric Decker	NYJ	1,027	3 of 6 seasons
John Brown	ARI	1,003	1 of 2 seasons

Of the 22 players listed above, all but three have gone for 1,000+ yards in at least half of their seasons in the NFL. Two of the exceptions are Emmanuel Sanders and Jeremy Maclin -- players that moved to a different team later in their career and found success. The only real surprise on the list is Doug Baldwin. Seattle had to lean on the pass when RB Marshawn Lynch got injured. The entire fantasy landscape of the team shifted, and QB Russell Wilson got the chance to win with his arm.

The wide receiver yardage trend is the exact opposite of the running back yardage trend. It's undeniable.

The only players that went over 1,000 receiving yards in 2014 and didn't repeat the performance last year were the following:

Jordy Nelson — Out all season due to a torn ACL. Nelson went over 1,000 yards in three of his seven seasons prior to his "lost" 2015.

Golden Tate — He signed with a new team (Detroit Lions). Tate still managed to put up 813 yards and scored six touchdowns. Over each of the last three seasons he cleared 800 yards.

Dez Bryant — Last season Bryant struggled with foot injuries and only appeared in nine games. Worse still, his primary quarterback (Tony Romo) only played in four games. Overall, Bryant has posted over 1,000 yards in three of his six seasons.

Randall Cobb — Without Nelson it was difficult for Cobb to play his brand of football (successfully). However, it should be noted that 2014 was the only year he cleared 1,000 yards in his five seasons in the league.

DeSean Jackson — Considered by many to be the poster-child for a "boom or bust" fantasy option, Jackson put up 1,000 plus yards in four of his eight seasons. Last year he only played in nine games, but prior to 2015 he'd never dipped below 700 yards in his career.

Alshon Jeffery — Missed seven games and still put up 807 yards. He's gone over 1,000 in two of his four seasons.

Steve Smith Sr. — He tore his Achilles and was out for nine games, but he's gone over 1,000 yards eight times in 15 seasons.

Anquan Boldin — In 2015, he missed two games but a bigger factor was playing for the struggling 49ers. Seven of his 13 NFL seasons have seen Boldin surpass 1,000 receiving yards.

Kelvin Benjamin — He was a rookie in 2014 and missed the entire 2015 season due to an ACL injury.

Vincent Jackson — Missing six games and having a rookie quarterback will hurt anyone's stat line. He has posted 1,000 plus yards in six of his 11 seasons.

When you do the math, 52.4 percent of the 1,000-yard receivers repeated that accomplishment the following year. Of the 10 players that missed the mark, two were ruled out during training camp and, as such, would not have had an adverse effect on your redraft strategy. Only Tate and Cobb played in all 16 games.

Bonus Tip: Eric Decker continues to be one of the most underrated wide receivers in the league. In three of his six seasons in the league he put up over 1,000 yards and double-digit touchdowns. Injuries marred his rookie season. In his second season he managed 612 yards and eight touchdowns with Tim Tebow throwing him the ball. Perhaps even more impressively, in 2014 he mustered 962 yards and five touchdowns catching passes from a Geno Smith/Michael Vick hybrid.

From 2010 to 2014 no more than two tight ends ever topped 1,000 receiving yards in a season. In 2015, four tight ends did it: Rob Gronkowski, Greg Olsen, Delanie Walker and Gary Barnidge. In 2015, three tight ends scored double-digit touchdowns: Tyler Eifert, Jordan Reed and Gronkowski.

You'll notice that Gronk is the only player on both of those lists. Since 2011 he's averaged at least 71.8 yards per game. But Gronkowski is also the only tight end going in the first three rounds. If you want the best, you'll have to pay for him.

If you draft at the back of the first round this year, targeting Gronkowski as your No. 1 pick makes sense. You'll get the best player at his position. But if you're at the front of the draft, don't sweat it. You have some nice tight end options down the board. Let the draft come to you.

Bonus Tip: Last season Reed, Eifert and Zach Miller of the Bears scored more fantasy points per opportunity than Gronkowski. Miller is a bona fide sleeper in 2016.

If you play with kickers, they matter. … And so do the new rules.

In 2014, 26 kickers with more than 10 attempts made 100 percent of their extra points. In 2015, only six kickers were perfect. That is a nose dive. No other way to put it.

That being said, don't get bogged down with PATs. Only two of the top-10 fantasy kickers from last season made 100 percent of their extra points. However, all but one of the top-10 made 100 percent of their field goals from inside 30 yards.

And for those of you that think there is no accurate way to predict kicking performance, here is a chart listing teams that averaged the most points per game over the 2015 regular season:

Tem	Avg. Pts/G	Kicker	Kicker Ranking
Carolina Panthers	31.3	Graham Gano	2
Arizona Cardinals	30.6	Chandler Cantanzaro	9
New England Patriots	29.1	Stephen Gostkowski	1
Pittsburgh Steelers	26.4	Chris Boswell	13 (missed 4 games)
Seattle Seahawks	26.4	Steven Hauschka	5
New York Giants	26.3	Josh Brown	3
Cincinnati Bengals	26.2	Mike Nugent	12
New Orleans Saints	25.5	Kai Forbath/Zach Hocker	33/35
Kansas City Cheifs	25.3	Cairo Santos	7
Washington Redskins	24.3	DustinHopkins	14 (missed 1 game)

If a kicker is on a high-scoring offense, they will be at the top at their position. The KISS method applies. Keep It Simple, Stupid.

Bonus Tip: Justin Tucker attempted 10 50+yard field goals in 2015 (a league high), but only made four. Greg Zuerlein attempted nine at the same distance, but only made three. Know your scoring. If you lose points for missed kicks, your kicker can cost you a championship.

Defense is about the opponent.

In most formats, the Broncos' defense scored the most fantasy points in the 2015 season. Denver put up a league-high 52 sacks, 13 fumble recoveries, 14 interceptions, scored five defensive touchdowns and only allowed an average of 18.5 points per game. And yet, they only scored double-digit fantasy points in eight of their 16 performances.

On the other hand, the Bears and the Browns each gave up top-10 defensive performances to their opponent in 10 of their 16 outings. The Titans gave up at least one interception in 12 of their games, and their offense scored 30 plus points only four times, two of which were in the first three weeks of the season.

Certain teams are weak: Teams with rookie quarterbacks, gun-slingers that throw interceptions, or simply a team that can't make it down the field to score are all likely to provide opposing defenses with great fantasy weeks.

But there is a catch. You will fight with the other owners in your league to get the defense with the best matchup every single week.

10 TEN EASY WAYS TO RUIN YOUR FANTASY FOOTBALL TEAM IN 2016

By Gary Davenport, Senior Staff Writer, Fantasy Sharks

All through the dog days of summer, in the days and weeks that comprise draft season in fantasy football, there's a deluge of "how to" articles and information in magazines just like this one and online. There's a plethora of pointers. A torrent of tips.

Time and time again, the message is the same. Do this. Do that. Draft this player in that round. Target this sleeper. Avoid that bust. Adopt this strategy to achieve that result in this format and that scoring. Do. Do. Do.

Well, here we're going to take a bit of a different tack. Flip the script, if you will. Examine the 2016 fantasy campaign through a different lens.

What not to do.

We've all been there. Made a gaffe that left our draft in shambles. Missed out on a waiver pickup that could have saved the season. Slipped up strategically on a lineup decision that made the difference in a must-win week.

And if you're sitting smiling, thinking to yourself that such a thing has never happened to you, then odds are you are one of two things: An individual boasting a less-than solid relationship with the truth, or overdue to make the sort of mistake that could ruin your 2016 season before it even starts.

If at the end of the year you can look back at this list, shake your head and laugh while saying "nope, I didn't do any of this," then odds are you'll be happy with how your season turned out.

And if you can't? Well, you can't say I didn't try to warn you.

DISASTER NO. 1: KNOW WHAT YOU'RE GETTING YOURSELF INTO

"They" say that assumption is the mother of all screw-ups. "They" also say that when you assume you make an ass out of you and me. I have no earthly idea who "they" are. But their mind-control microwaves no longer have any effect on me thanks to my nifty new tinfoil hat.

However, in this case at least "they" are right -- and their credos bear out just in much in fantasy football as in life.

It never fails. I see it literally every year. Five rounds into a draft a chat window will open and an owner will say, "Wait, this league is PPR?" Or, "I didn't realize that this league had a 'superflex' spot."

Well, Norman Einstein (that Joe Theismann is a brainy one, he is), you didn't know because you didn't check. You assumed that the lineup requirements and scoring were the same as every other league you are in.

Before your draft (although preferably not right before it) take a few minutes to examine the scoring and lineup requirements of your league. If it starts three wide receivers, then that position will be hit harder early in drafts in a year where that's already the case more often than not. If the aforementioned "superflex" spot exists (in other words quarterbacks are eligible) then the notion of taking a signal-caller early suddenly becomes a lot less nuts.

We'll get to that in a bit.

The QB position is also where we generally see the most variations in scoring. Whereas the biggest change you see at RB, WR and TE is usually just the inclusion or exclusion of PPR (or maybe 1.5 PPR for tight ends) scoring for quarterbacks can be all over the place. Likewise for team defenses.

How can you win the game if you don't know the rules?

CALAMITY NO. 2: MARRY A GOOD WOMAN – NOT A FANTASY DRAFT STRATEGY

There are as many draft strategies in fantasy football as there are colors in the rainbow. Actually, for that statement to be true, we would have to be talking about one psychedelic, Jerry Garcia, "Yellow Submarine" (the movie), don't eat the brown acid at Woodstock kind of rainbow. Because there are a lot of fantasy draft strategies.

There's the old tried-and-true RB-heavy strategy (which many believe is becoming obsolete). In 2016 many fantasy owners are going wide receiver-heavy early -- at the far end of that scale is the "zero RB" theory, which Jen Ryan explained at Fantasy Pros.

"In essence," Ryan said, "your first three to four picks in your draft should be spent on those who will be catching the ball, not running it. 'Zero RB Theory' supports the notion that the running back position is volatile and riddled with injury, making it a far less consistent position than wide receiver or top tier tight end."

Then there's value-based drafting, an analytical approach designed by Joe Bryant of FootballGuys a decade ago. VBD uses a set of projections and baseline to determine player values, operating on the principle (per Bryant) that "The value of a player is determined not by the number of points he scores, but by how much he outscores his peers at his particular position."

Every strategy has it merits. And its pitfalls. But the largest pitfall of all is tunnel vision -- stubbornly clinging to a strategy no matter what happens on draft day.

You want to know the best strategy to have in fantasy drafts? A flexible one. An adaptable one. One written in pencil instead of pen, which you can change on a dime depending on the flow of your draft.

CATASTROPHE NO. 3: DON'T BE A BUBBLE BRAT

If there's one of these I'm most often guilty of, it's this. And while it might not completely destroy your fantasy team, you won't be doing yourself any favors.

It's an easy trap to fall into, too. As a fantasy draft unfolds, it's only natural to become enveloped in building your own team. However, if you so concentrate on what you yourself are doing that you completely lose track of what's going on around you, no good will come of it.

Savvy fantasy owners don't just monitor construction of their own teams. They track how the league's other owners are faring, as well. It isn't necessarily easy, but it's worth the effort -- especially if you're picking on either end, in either slot 1-3 or slots 10-12.

If you're sitting in the three hole near end of the fourth round trying to decide between a wide receiver and a running back, the knowledge that both teams who will pick twice before your next selection haven't taken a RB yet is a handy bit of information to have.

Also, in tracking the draft you can often get a feel for what strategy the other owners in your league are employing. It's even better if you can find out this sort of thing ahead of time, although that's easier said than done unless you're drafting live. Knowing that Jim in Accounting is a proponent of Zero RB Theory won't suck if you wind up in the slot next to him.

Favorite teams. Favorite players. Guys they absolutely hate. All are intelligence worth gathering on opponents. Don't spend so much time (or effort tracking their draft) doing so that your own team suffers, but don't draft in a bubble. Bubbles are bad.

CATACLYSM NO. 4: DON'T DRAFT A QB EARLY

If you look at the "experts" draft contained within this magazine (or really any such industry draft), you'll notice something fairly quickly. No quarterbacks come off the board until at least the third round, and most teams wait significantly longer.

There's a good reason for this. Actually, there are several. In the vast majority of leagues teams start only one quarterback weekly as opposed to two or three running backs or receivers. Every single season there are quality options available later -- in 2016, Eli Manning (Giants), Philip Rivers (Chargers) and Kirk Cousins (Redskins) are all available outside the top 10.

As to the notion those players can't compare to an Aaron Rodgers? Well, I'll let the folks at The Late Round Quarterback take it from here. "Sure, you can get a top-notch passer early," they said, "hit on a couple of running backs and wide receivers and have a team that's quite literally impossible to stop. But that's usually not how it works. At least, that's not a sustainable, long-term way of winning."

"I'm fully aware that the chance of my quarterback performing like Aaron Rodgers this year is slim. But my chances to outscore the wide receivers and running backs on the team with Rodgers is great."

Then there's the not-so insignificant fact that both of the top-2 quarterbacks last year (Rodgers and Andrew Luck) were busts. When that happens after you've already dug yourself a hole at wideout and in the backfield -- well, you're toast.

FIASCO NO. 5: AVOID AGEISM EARLY AND THE AARP SET LATE IN DRAFTS

"Age Ain't Nothing but a Number" may be a (somewhat creepy) song by the late R&B star Aaliyah, but that number annually carries quite a bit of weight with fantasy owners. Too much, in many cases. Everyone wants the shiny new toy. And far too often fantasy owners are eager to throw dirt on the 30-plus set before it's time to write them off.

Not only is this a trap you can avoid falling into, but you can turn it into an advantage on draft day.

Indianapolis Colts running back Frank Gore (RB30). Arizona Cardinals wideout Larry Fitzgerald (WR27). And the aforementioned Philip Rivers (QB13). All are the wrong side of 30 years age. With the exception of Rivers (who led the NFL in pass attempts in 2015) all produced above their ADP last year. And yet all three are undervalued again this season per their Average Draft Position at Fantasy Pros.

There's value to be had with the elder set every year. Plus you get 10 percent off at Fantasy Denny's.

However, when you get into the later rounds this script should be flipped. There's little point to using precious depth spots on low-upside veterans. Shoot the moon on high-ceiling youngsters that will prove huge steals if they pan out.

The choice between young Pittsburgh Steelers wide receiver Sammie Coates (WR64) and veteran Patriots pass-catcher Danny "Ow my whatever!" Amendola (WR65) isn't a choice. Coates may do very little, or may explode. Amendola may be a "meh" WR4, or he may be a "meh" WR4. If he can stay healthy, that is.

HAZARD NO. 6: DON'T DRAFT A KICKER BEFORE THE FINAL ROUND

As Matt Brandon of Scout pointed out, taking a kicker early is the easiest way to get laughed at in fantasy drafts.

"Is it worth drafting the top kicker in order to gain a minimal edge over your opponent?, Brandon asked. "Clearly, the answer is no. Instead of drafting a kicker, you could snag a sleeper who finishes the season as a top-10 wide receiver or your stud RB's backup so that you have something to fall back on in the event of an injury. Even if you do draft the first kicker off the board, there is no guarantee that he will finish with the most Fantasy points at his position."

Last year, in NFL.com default fantasy scoring, the difference between the No. 1 kicker (Stephen Gostkowski of the Patriots) and the No. 12 kicker (Dan Bailey of the Dallas Cowboys) was 16 fantasy points -- two points and change a game. The year before it was 1.5 points per game. It just isn't worth it.

In fact, if your league offers free agency before Week 1 and you aren't required to take a kicker, don't. You can pick one up just before the season and use that roster spot on a speculative addition with a shot at winning a larger role in training camp.

APOCALYPSE NO. 7: PAY ATTENTION!!!

So you've drafted well. Avoided any of the gaffes I've mentioned so far. Got some good values. Maybe even snagged a sleeper or two. You're feeling pretty damned good about yourself.

Well, snap out of it, cupcake -- the work has only started.

Complacency is the kiss of death in fantasy football. The fact that you love your roster is no reason not to check the league's waiver wire each and every week. That running back you don't need in Week 2 may come in really handy in Week 6 when injuries start piling up (and they will pile up).

The fact you don't think you need to make a trade is no reason not to propose them -- especially if you feel like you are negotiating from a position of strength. That team in a panic who desperately needs the extra wide receiver you have isn't much good to you if you don't notice. Rest assured someone will -- and that opponent will benefit from your inaction.

And loving your starting lineup is no reason not to do some matchup research every week. Taking the few minutes to learn that your WR3 got dinged up in practice the Thursday before a lousy matchup can be the difference between a win and a loss.

FELL STROKE NO. 8: SCROOGING IT UP

This is one of the more common mistakes I see made in fantasy leagues where waivers are determined either using a FAAB (Free Agent Auction Bidding) system or there's a static priority (i.e. No. 1 stays No. 1 until he makes a claim, at which point he slides to the end of the line.

The notion of passing on a player who can help your team in any real way because you shouldn't spend your FAAB dollars too early or "waste" that precious waiver priority is, for lack of a better word, busted.

As Scout's Larry Gold wrote, FAAB can be something of a tightrope. "Players get frequently injured and legitimate options pop up all year," he said, "so it's important to remember the season is a marathon, not a sprint. With that said, you also don't want to be out of contention after a month, so it's important to recognize the option to upgrade via waivers."

The same holds true for that top priority spot. Yes, you'll kick yourself in Week 8 if the claim of the year shows up and you used the priority in Week 6. But not nearly as hard as you'll kick yourself if that waiver wire wonder doesn't show as the losses pile up -- and by the time he does you're Cleveland.

If a player can help you -- if he has a real chance at making your starting lineup in a given week -- then go get him.

SETBACK NO. 9: THE FART OF THE DEAL

So you're sitting there in Week 7 in a panic. Injuries have ravaged your running backs. You've lost two games in a row and just started Darren McFadden of the Dallas Cowboys -- on purpose. You feel dirty. You've been crying a lot.

Then another owner in your league offers you a trade, targeting your smoking depth at wide receiver. You'd get the weekly starter at running back you so desperately need. But you turn the offer down complete with a snotty rejection message -- because he gets the better end of the deal.

I cannot tell you how many fantasy seasons I've seen go right down the tubes for no other reason than teams felt the need to "win" every trade. It's a backwards way of thinking. A completely wrong way of looking at things.

You aren't making a multi-million dollar merger. This is fantasy football. And who gets the better end of what deal isn't relevant. Making your team better is all that matters. If you have a need and can improve through that "lopsided" deal, then swallow your pride and do it. You can't put your pride on the mantle. And you can't win a trophy if you don't make the playoffs.

Being over a barrel isn't fun. Neither is helping an opponent shore up his one weakness. And I'm not saying you should just smile as you're being ripped off. But getting the better end of a trade or creating an opposition juggernaut isn't important. Making the playoffs is important.

You can worry about the juggernaut once you get there.

DEBACLE NO. 10: BUT THE MATCHUPS! THE MATCHUUUUPPPPSSSS!!!!

Whew. Made it. I was running out of disaster synonyms.

Matchups are important, especially as you get deeper into your starting lineup. Rolling out a "flex" tailback against a team that gives up 75 yards a game on the ground or rolling out a WR3 against the squad allowing the fewest fantasy points to the position can be a good way to get beat in a must-win stretch run week.

But while knowing the NFL matchups can be vitally important, your fantasy matchup is much less so. In fact, it doesn't matter even a little bit.

The notion of even considering sitting Pittsburgh Steelers wide receiver Antonio Brown because your opponent has Ben Roethlisberger (or vice-versa) and they will "cancel each other out" is, for lack of a better term, bat-crap loony. The only thing you are going to "cancel out" by overthinking things in that manner is your chances of winning.

Who your opponent starts in a given week is irrelevant. You have absolutely zero control over it. It matters less than the bad weather people get a twist about for no real reason (short a typhoon high winds are the only weather worth worrying about).

Your job (your only job) each week is to field the starting lineup you believe will score you the most points. That's it. End of story.

Let me leave you with this final bonus pitfall to avoid. Unless you're doing it for a living (hell, even if you are), fantasy football is a hobby. Hobbies are supposed to be fun. Don't get so wrapped in a season (no matter how good or bad it may be) that you lose sight of that. Enjoy yourself. Have a few laughs.

Life's too short not to.

HOW TO WIN at Daily Fantasy Football (for Beginners)

Huseyin "The Brain" Aksu, Fantasy Couch

Maybe you have been playing traditional, season-long fantasy football with your buddies and have never tried Daily Fantasy Sports (DFS), or perhaps you have little-to-no experience with DFS but have some curiosity as to what exactly all these TV ads are talking about. Well then, this article is for you! And even if you've played daily fantasy football for years, there may be a tip or two that you didn't know before.

Before we start talking strategy, I'm going to warn you that DFS is very competitive and requires a great deal of research and skill. The biggest mistake people make when diving into the DFS world is thinking that they can dominate daily leagues just because they are good at traditional fantasy football. The average buy-in for a competitive, traditional league is $100-150, which means you are risking less than $10 per week. In DFS, there are sharks (participants who risk millions of dollars over the season and make quite a bit of profit). Some of these sharks even play DFS for a living. But don't worry, you're reading this article and I'm going to show how to avoid these sharks and find success early on. My intention was not to scare you away, but to give you a realistic understanding about your competition. Let's start off with the basics, then we'll delve into the different types of contests and which strategies to use for each one.

What is DFS?

Daily fantasy sports started around 2009. It became more and more popular, and has really taken off over the last three years. The objective in daily fantasy football is the same as it is in season-long leagues -- create a team that outscores your competitors'. When you draft a season-long fantasy football team, you are stuck with that team for the rest of the season. In DFS, you can play with a new team every week. Daily fantasy football contests start and end at different times. The most popular daily fantasy football contests start with the Sunday morning games and end as soon as the Monday Night Football game is over. Other contests start on Thursday and end Monday, while some may span for as little as two NFL games, i.e., Sunday Night Football and Monday Night Football. Some DFS sites allow you to substitute players that have not played yet, while other sites lock your entire roster once the contest starts. Legally, daily fantasy contests must include at least two NFL games and you cannot comprise your entire roster of players from the same team.

The Pros of DFS (Compared to Traditional Leagues)

Those season-long owners who drafted Dez Bryant or Andrew Luck last year were in agony and had to desperately look for a WR or QB to replace those guys. In daily leagues, if a player you selected in Week 1 suffers a serious injury, you don't have to own that same guy the following week. Actually, you don't even have to play at all. You can play Week 1, take a break for a few weeks and resume playing in Week 5. In traditional leagues, taking a few weeks off is obviously not a good idea, since you need to adjust your lineup before kickoff and make your waiver claims before your league's processing time. Any and all fantasy sports leagues can be played for free (no monetary prize) or with a set buy-in price where the winners collect real money. In DFS, you can collect your money every week, right after the contest's final NFL game is played. As many of you know, in traditional leagues, you have to wait the entire 16- or 17-week season, and even then, there might be delays and difficulties when collecting your final prize.

The Cons of DFS (Compared to Traditional Leagues)

There's a lot more money to be won playing daily sports, which means there's a lot more money to be lost as well. A tremendous amount of research needs to be done each week you play daily fantasy football if you wish to have a successful DFS career. The fun you have trash talking with your co-workers, family and buddies is replaced with the thrill of winning cold hard cash -- this is not necessarily a bad thing.

How to Play – The Basics

The most popular daily fantasy football format is called salary cap. Because of its overwhelming popularity, this will be the only DFS format that will be covered in this article. Salary cap is very similar to a traditional auction draft in that if you really want a player, you can have that player. In a salary cap format you have a maximum amount of "money" (your salary cap) to spend on players. You can pick any NFL players you want, as long as your team's total cost stays under the salary cap. Even though researching and picking the perfect roster will take a good amount of time, the process of submitting your roster once you've finished can be done in seconds. Those of you who have been involved in a competitive auction draft know that those can be long, drawn-out events.

Just like in traditional fantasy football, you have to fulfill the DFS site's position requirements before hitting submit. On FanDuel, you have to pick 1 QB, 2 RBs, 3 WRs, 1 TE, 1 team defense and 1 kicker. On DraftKings, it is the same deal, but instead of a kicker, you pick a FLEX (RB/WR/TE) player. The scoring systems are different depending on which site you play on, but overall it isn't much different than you've experienced in season-long leagues. There's not much use for a bench in DFS, so the popular sites don't waste time by having you select reserve players. You can play for free or join contests that begin for as little as 25 cents. I strongly recommend you do not risk a lot of money if you're just starting out. Start off slow, and then -- if you want -- you can risk a significant amount after playing for a few weeks. A good rule of thumb is to spend no more than 20 percent of your DFS "bankroll" in any given week. If you are a true beginner, feel free to spend less than 20 percent.

Strategy

DFS Roster Creation vs. Traditional League Drafting

In season-long leagues, an NFL player's potential can play a significant role when it comes to his draft position, especially in keeper leagues. In daily fantasy football, you focus strictly on how a player is projected to perform this week. In season-long fantasy football, injury risk is a huge factor when drafting an NFL player a la Jordan Reed, Sam Bradford, Darren McFadden, Arian Foster or Julius Thomas. In DFS, risk of injury is a small, almost insignificant, factor when deciding which NFL players to select. Don't pay too much attention to whether a player is labeled injury-prone or not. If a player has a pre-existing injury, however, that is completely different and can definitely be a factor on whether or not you pick that player in your daily lineup. If a healthy player is thought to be "injury prone" but you expect that player to have a great game, then the injury-prone label should not factor into your DFS selection process.

Bargain Prices

Let's say during pre-game warmups on Sunday morning, a team's starting running back is injured. I would get a sinister grin on my face and rush to see the price on that team's backup running back. More than likely, his price will be extremely cheap and the value for that player will be too good to pass up. That's just one example of exploiting a player's price. Sometimes prices are just flat-out wrong. The very first thing I do when the new week's salary prices are revealed is look for bargains on great players.

Last NFL season, many DFS sites released their Week 1 salary prices during training camp before the Bills announced who their starting quarterback would be. This resulted in some sites placing the minimum price on eventual starter QB Tyrod Taylor. I hadn't seen Taylor play a whole lot, but I knew he could scramble and wasn't a terrible QB, so I put him in many of my Week 1 lineups. He didn't have a great game (195 yards, TD, 41 rush yards, no turnovers), but for his minimal price he provided me with incredible value. By selecting a minimum-price quarterback like Taylor, it freed up enough cap space for me to own star players like Julio Jones (nine rec, 141 yards, two TD).

Another reason why you should look through the prices of all the week's available players is to see if there are any glitches. They are extremely rare, but every now and then the website may make a huge mistake. It is much better to know about these pricing mistakes before you immerse yourself in other research.

NFL Point Spreads and Lines

Looking at the NFL betting lines should be the next thing you do to prepare for a new week of daily fantasy football, and it is one of the main pieces of research used by those sharks I mentioned earlier. You can easily find the Vegas odds online by searching Google -- just make sure the site you decide to use is reputable. The experts that calculate the lines/odds provide us with the absolute best NFL projections available. If they screw up, they could wind up losing hundreds of millions of dollars on any given Sunday. Lines may differ slightly depending on the website or company you are looking at, but most of the time the numbers are very similar.

The NFL lines reveal each NFL game's projected game script -- the way a game is expected to play out. Although the lines aren't always accurate, they give us a good idea of what's going to happen, or what should happen. Let's look at the very first game of last season. In the Week 1 opener the Patriots were favored to beat the Steelers by seven points (NE -7) and the total projected points were 51 (O/U 51). (Remember, we're pretending to look at the betting lines before Week 1.) The point total, or over/under, of 51 was expected to be the second-highest scoring game that week. Actually, only four games were projected to score 50 or more points during last season's opening week. Picking players in high-scoring games can be a good idea because that usually means more touchdowns. Conversely, picking a team defense in a low-scoring game can be a good strategy as well. Looking at Week 1, the Jets were favored to beat the Browns by three points (NYJ -3) with a total score of 40 points (O/U 40). The Jets' defense seems like a solid candidate to pick for our team defense in DFS, especially if they have an affordable price tag. Also, teams with a lead tend to run the ball more to control the clock, so picking Chris Ivory (the Jets' starting RB at that time) may have been a good idea as well. In fact, Ivory's price was reasonable and the Jets were playing the Browns, making Ivory a very attractive choice that week. On the other hand, if a team is expected to be down, they will likely attempt more passes later in the game to catch up. Picking this team's QB can be a worthwhile strategy, but beware not to pick a QB on a horrible offense just because that team is a huge underdog. Most of these tips and strategies are small pieces of the big puzzle, but with some common sense they will ultimately help separate you from the competition.

Players to Avoid

This one is simple, but will help save you tons of heartache. I suggest you make a list of players that have a zero chance of making it on your DFS squad. Keeping up with player news is a must when creating this list. Here are some reasons players make it onto my personal "avoid" list:

- Player is heading into the game with an injury that may affect his performance
- Player is overpriced

- Player might get benched or be on a snap count
- Receiver that may be used only as a decoy

Weather

This is typically a small factor when it comes to selecting lineups, but I study the weather every single week, as it helps me gain that edge over competitors who don't. Unless there is a colossal blizzard or an epic storm in the forecast, I don't pay too much attention to rain or snow. Back in 2009 Tom Brady threw five touchdowns in one quarter when it was snowing. You would have been banging your head against the wall if the weather was the only reason you didn't pick Brady to be on your team that week.

The No. 1 factor to look at when it comes to weather is actually wind. Looking at recent statistics, in games with high winds, teams attempt fewer passes and throw the ball for fewer yards per pass attempt. When winds are above 15 MPH, I typically avoid quarterbacks in those games, as there is likely better value to be found elsewhere at the QB position.

Cash Games vs. GPPs

There are two basic types of DFS contests: Cash games and Guaranteed Prize Pools (GPPs). Head-to-head, 50/50 and double up contests are all cash games. Head-to-head is a contest comprised of two participants: you and your opponent. 50-50 leagues are contests where you play with, for example, 100 participants and the top 50 percent (top 50 participants) win a prize. The prize will be a little bit less than the buy-in fee because the DFS site needs to make money. Double up contests are very similar to 50-50 leagues, but they pay out the same exact amount you bought in with. In double up contests, only the top 45 percent (approximately) win a prize. No matter which cash game you choose, the strategy is always the same: create a low-risk team with a high floor. This means you want to create a team with safe players. Investing more of your salary in the QB and RB positions can be a good idea in cash games as those two positions are the most consistent week-to-week. If there is an incredibly cheap player that is slated to have a good game, you almost always want to include them in most of your cash lineups. That seems like a no-brainer, but in GPPs you sometimes might want to avoid obvious choices like that.

GPPs are also known as tournaments and are really fun. Ever since I came close to winning $1 million in a GPP, I've been hooked. If Gronk would've just had a good game against the Cowboys, I would have…never mind. Anyway, GPP contests can be quite the rollercoaster ride -- you've been warned! In a GPP, the strategy is basically the opposite of a cash game: create a high-risk lineup with a high ceiling. To maximize your risk, you want to pick boom-or-bust players. Investing more of your salary money in wide receivers is a good way to do this, as they are far more inconsistent than quarterbacks and running backs. GPPs usually contain a large amount of participants and are very difficult to win, so you want to separate yourself from the pack. If you think that a certain player is going to be a popular selection that week you may want to fade (avoid) that player. This fading strategy should only be used in big-pool GPPs where there are a lot of participants. Because the prizes are guaranteed in these types of contests, if a tournament is less than full, your odds of winning significantly increase. In other words, if you score zero fantasy points but you are the only person who signed up for that GPP, you win the first place prize!

When Picking QBs in DFS look for:

- QBs facing poor pass defenses
- QBs on pass-heavy teams
- QBs that like to throw passes inside the opponent's 10-yd line
- Teams that are expected to be behind and might need to throw the ball more

When Picking RBs in DFS look for:

- High snap count
- High percentage of team's snap count compared to team's other RBs
- RBs that get goal-line snaps and goal-line carries
- Teams with the lead who run the ball more
- RBs with pass-catching ability (who tend to be immune to the game script)

When Picking WRs in DFS look for:

- High amount of targets
- WRs that get a large percentage of the team's targets
- High amount of targets inside the 10-yd line
- Taller receivers who get more TDs

When Picking a D/ST in DFS look for:

- Cheap price
- Defenses that pressure the opposing QB

Believe it or not, most people who play daily fantasy football do not know these tips, so by reading this article you will have an edge over them. Before I let you embark on your DFS journey, I want to give you a couple final tips. For salary cap formats, don't feel obligated to spend every last bit of your remaining salary. It's perfectly all right to have a couple hundred dollars left over, but at the same time you don't want to leave a good chunk of unused salary on the table. A good rule of thumb is to try and use up 98-99 percent of your entire salary at most DFS sites.

One easy way to spot the big sharks is to look at the head-to-head contests where the buy-in price is over $1,000. Almost always, user accounts that are constantly lurking around in high-stakes contests are sharks. The more sharks you can avoid, the more your chances of winning will increase. I wish you all good luck. For more DFS tips and weekly videos you can find my YouTube channel at YouTube.com/FantasyCouch. You can also find me on Twitter @HuseyinTheBrain and @FantasyCouch.

7 Seven Basic Principles for Building a Winner in an Auction

Matt Papson, RealitySportsOnline.com

For those of you who owned a copy of this publication last year, you'll notice the title of this article looks familiar. It hasn't changed, and neither have my Auction principles. I've made some tweaks, but the basics are tried and true. For you new readers, you will want to read carefully, whether you are an auction veteran or a newbie.

I was a huge Auction proponent long before Reality Sports Online existed. My passion for Auction goes beyond my affinity for analyzing "value." There's no luck involved in an Auction. Before the clock starts ticking, every owner has the same probability of winning the league. Every minute of the "auction draft" is action-packed. We all know how typical snake drafts go: Wait, wait, wait, try (and fail) to trade back, reach for my next best available player even though I have no idea where he is on anybody else's radar, wait, wait, wait, watch the player I wanted get selected when I'm on deck, sulk, make a frustration pick, and repeat.

I know that many fantasy owners are intimidated by auction formats. There's no shame in admitting it. It's one of the biggest challenges we face when trying to get players to try our fantasy Front Office platform. For anybody who isn't familiar with Reality Sports Online, it's a platform that enables fantasy owners to build and manage their teams, just like an NFL General Manager. The platform has a ton of cool features (Rookie draft, real salary cap management, franchise tag, etc.), but our claim to fame is our Free Agency Auction Room. It's basically an auction on steroids, where owners compete to sign players to single- or multi-year contracts in real-time, online.

If you find yourself hesitant to embrace auctions, there really is nothing to fear. Managing a budget isn't hard, you do it every day in life. Fantasy is a game of statistics. If you're playing fantasy then you're smart enough to do an auction. Try it. Once you do, you'll never go back.

No matter what Auction format you choose, there are a few guiding principles that can help you win your league. Building a great team in an auction league takes strategy, patience, discipline, and a knack for knowing when to break the rules. Take some or all of the principles below and incorporate them into your auction strategy.

1) Set your own pre-auction value for EVERY player (who is going to be purchased/signed for more than the minimum)

No matter how much you dislike a player, you should always place a value on him. Every player has some value to your team. In an auction, you're purchasing a player's statistics. Every player's value is relative to the cost associated with acquiring him. Sure, you'd rather not have Player "X" because he plays for your NFL team's archrival, but you still need to be prepared to buy/sign him. There is a price for every player at which you should be thrilled to acquire them. It doesn't have to be an exact science for every player, but place a number on them where you'll be happy with the purchase or signing. It's a little tricky when you're talking about a multi-year contract for Reality Sports Online, so in that case, just make sure that the guys that you're "value-signing" only get a one-year contract. In 2016, I'm not particularly excited about Demaryius Thomas (post-Manning era), Dion Lewis (flashes of brilliance, but only 800 yards from scrimmage in five seasons) or Brock Osweiler (despite the Texans' $72M), but they're all worth a below-market-price bid.

2) Be the value enforcer

As you read on you'll notice that a lot of these principles are similar. But while they're all tied together and build on one another, they're all distinct. Being the value enforcer is not a popular position in auctions. Enforcing value works best when you've got genuine, multi-owner bidding wars for each player, but it's not likely to happen for every player. I generally like to sit back and wait in auctions for as long as possible before getting involved in the bidding, but, in order to get value later in the auction, you have to make sure that other owners are paying close to full price for top players. No matter what platform you use, the experts who assign the recommended values put a lot of time and effort into their analysis. Even if the values aren't perfect, they're in the right ballpark. Always make sure top players are going for at least 80 percent of their recommended value, and 90-plus percent if it's a player on your fringe list. I never nominate a player I hope to land, but you really can't predict the order in which players will be nominated, so sometimes you'll be forced to sign players early. In general, at the halfway point of the auction, I try to have more dollars remaining than at least half of the other teams. In order to get your value signings late, you need the other teams to spend their money early.

3) Pay attention to other owners' roster composition

Every auction is a puzzle. As every piece (or player) falls into place, the total picture becomes clearer, and it's easier to place the remaining pieces. It's important to take in all the clues throughout the auction so you can deduce which owners might be genuinely interested in acquiring certain players/positions. Too many times fantasy owners' laser-focus on their own team's goals keep them from seeing what's unfolding around of them. It can help to know when someone is just running up the price on you because they know you need to fill a position. And, if you're paying attention, you can do the same thing when you know other owners are desperate to acquire a certain position or player. Every extra dollar you force another owner to spend is a dollar you're saving for yourself later.

4) Let the auction come to you, don't chase

Whether it's a draft or an auction, it's always important to have a strategy in place in advance (if it weren't, you wouldn't be reading this!). For drafts, some fixate on getting X position in Round 1 and Y players at X position by Z round. For auctions, many owners build positional budgets or allocations, where others might say "I'm getting Players A, B, and C no matter what it costs." Whatever strategy you enter the auction with, you have to be willing to deviate from it if the situation warrants a change of plans. Be flexible and willing to improvise. One of your top targets may have gone well over your budget, forcing you to bow out, or you may have acquired somebody you didn't particularly want while enforcing value. Adapt and conquer. You don't have to completely abandon your original strategy, but the more flexibility you have with your plan the more likely you'll be able to find value.

5) Seek and find value

In auction formats, particularly on the Reality Sports Online platform with multi-year contracts and guaranteed money, I've found that many experts like to employ a "studs and duds" strategy (most of the budget dedicated to a few "stud" players with the remainder spent filling out the roster with best player available). With respect to multi-year contracts, that theory certainly has merit, and even in single-year auctions, many people can still make it work. I like to be contrarian whenever possible, though some would probably just call me stubborn. I'm a value guy. I love getting bargains on players. I get about as much joy as you could imagine getting a player for 50 percent off. Take a look at some of the four-year contracts (each team gets one contract each year in standard settings) given out in my favorite fantasy league (the Matt Waldman Reality Sports Online Experts League, a platform that utilizes the NFL Salary Cap):

First Name	Last Name	Pos	Team	Age	Signed	Length	Value
Cole	Beasley	WR	DAL	27	2014	4	$2,000,000
Brock	Osweiler	QB	HOU	26	2014	4	$5,000,000
Khiry	Robinson	RB	NYJ	27	2014	4	$11,000,000
Michael	Floyd	WR	ARI	27	2013	4	$13,000,000
Cecil	Shorts	WR	HOU	29	2013	4	$18,500,000
Martellus	Bennett	TE	NE	29	2014	4	$18,500,000
Allen	Hurns	WR	JAC	25	2015	4	$19,000,000
Sam	Bradford	QB	PHI	29	2015	4	$21,000,000
Andy	Dalton	QB	CIN	29	2015	4	$22,500,000
Carson	Palmer	QB	ARI	37	2015	4	$22,500,000
Nick	Foles	QB	LA	27	2014	4	$25,000,000
Philip	Rivers	QB	SD	35	2015	4	$26,000,000
T.Y.	Hilton	WR	IND	27	2013	4	$26,500,000
Rueben	Randle	WR	PHI	25	2014	4	$29,000,000
Matthew	Stafford	QB	DET	28	2015	4	$30,000,000
Ladarius	Green	TE	PIT	26	2014	4	$32,000,000

Sure, they're not all major hits, but there are some deals in there that look awfully good heading into 2016. The point is, experts (and these are good ones) are willing to take a shot on value plays knowing they might strike out, and you should be willing to roll the dice as well. I particularly consider myself a value-seeker when it comes to Quarterbacks. I'd rather sign QBs 12, 14, and 16 for a combined $20M per year hoping one cracks the top 8 than invest $25M for a "Top-5" QB and still need to figure out my backup situation. I like building deep rosters and trusting myself with tough start/sit decisions each week rather than having clear-cut starters and bench players, and that's true across all positions.

6) It's okay to pay a premium

Even though I just spent the last few paragraphs preaching value, there are also times when it's okay to pay a premium. At the beginning, I told you to set a value for EVERY player -- the amount you'd be willing to acquire the player for and be "happy" with your signing. But, I also told you that you needed to be willing to improvise and adapt. If you get beyond your "happy place" budget on a player that you really like, spend an extra 5-10 percent and trust your instincts. In 2013 and 2014 it was Antonio Brown for me. In 2015 it was Jeremy Maclin. There was no expert magazine or online resource assigning a value to him higher than my own -- I was getting him no matter what it cost. I "overpaid" versus pre-season values and projections, but it ended up working out okay. I'll also say, particularly in Reality Sports Online leagues, you can afford to overspend on one-year deals, especially after the mid-point in the auction. There may not be a better place to put those dollars to use later in the auction, so pick your spots and be aggressive.

7) Don't click mindlessly

With everything we've covered so far, this may seem like a silly principle to close with, but don't underestimate it. Auctions are fun, action-packed, and making a bid/offer is exhilarating. As a friend of mine likes to say, "Clicking is addicting. Once the bidding starts, I just can't help myself." It's true, it's always more fun being in on the action, but you know what else is fun? Winning! Be careful quick-clicking, because somebody else may have put in a manual offer/bid, and you may have just unintentionally blown a quarter of your budget on Trent Richardson. Our auction software has safeguards for protection and a rewind for egregious errors, but some Commissioners are ruthless dictators that make you sleep in the bed you've made. Once a player gets beyond your value-enforcer level, just stop clicking and let the other owners duke it out. Only harm can come from a meaningless click.

Building a Dynasty Top-30 Rookies for Dynasty Leagues

By Rich Dotson, DynastyNerds.com

When it comes to dynasty fantasy football, the best way to set your team up for long-term success is through your rookie draft. Hitting on your rookie picks will put you in position to compete for your league's championship every year. 2016 is not a deep rookie class and one of the weaker classes of the past few seasons, but there is still talent to be found and some high-upside players. Even so, if you are able to move picks from this year in exchange for selections in 2017 I highly recommend it. In the meantime, DynastyNerds.com digs deep to give you the advantages you'll need to get the best from the 2016 NFL rookie class.

Quarterbacks

1. Jared Goff – Rams

   Goff was the No. 1 pick in this year's draft and for good reason, as he has all the tools necessary to be a franchise quarterback. As with all the rookie quarterbacks in this year's class, it could take some time before you start to see production for your dynasty team. Goff joins a Rams team with limited playmakers, but he does have one of the league's top running backs behind him to ease the pain. Goff is a solid pick at QB, but he'll need time to develop.

2. Carson Wentz – Eagles

   Wentz joins a much better offensive situation than Goff, with young playmakers like Jordan Matthews to throw to. Sam Bradford will start the season as the Eagles' No. 1 QB giving Wentz time to acclimate to the NFL, but Wentz will be under center to start the 2017 season. Size, arm, athleticism – Wentz has it all as evidenced by his first-round draft pedigree. If you're looking to gamble on a quarterback in the second round of your rookie drafts, Wentz is a nice player to put your chips on.

3. Paxton Lynch – Broncos

   The Broncos traded up to acquire Lynch, hoping to secure their quarterback of the future. Lynch is tall (6'7"), athletic and strong-armed, but needs to add a few pounds to his gangly frame. Of this year's rookie quarterbacks, he certainly landed in the best spot, but he will need a lot of NFL coaching before he is ready to step on the field. Patience is preached here once again, and you have to consider who will still be wearing orange when Lynch is finally ready to produce in Denver.

Running Backs

1. Ezekiel Elliott – Cowboys

   The cream of the crop in this year's class, Elliott could be the top overall dynasty running back before he ever takes a snap in the NFL. He is well-rounded, with excellent footwork, vision, agility, balance and drive. He just turned 21 this July and is one of the youngest players in the NFL. He landed in a perfect spot, running behind a Dallas offensive line that allowed Darren McFadden to surpass 1,000 yards rushing in 2015 (with 4.6 YPC) and that has been the top run blocking line for the last two seasons. A true three-down back that averaged 3.6 yards after contact last season, Elliott is the kind of player that you build a championship team around. Elliott is the 1.01 rookie pick in all formats, and you should take him with a huge smile.

2. Kenneth Dixon – Ravens

   Dixon is great in space. Elusive, he catches the ball very well, runs aggressively, and is not afraid of contact. The biggest benefit from adding Dixon to your dynasty team is that Marc Trestman is the Ravens' offensive coordinator. Trestman runs the most pass-happy offense for running backs in the NFL. A running back has caught 69 or more passes in his system seven different times. Since 2013, Trestman's backs have seen 22 percent of their offenses' targets. For a bit of perspective, in 2015 only 19 wide receivers saw that high a share of their team's targets. Justin Forsett turns 31 this October, and Buck Allen is not the answer. Look for Dixon to produce – especially in PPR leagues – immediately.

3. Paul Perkins – Giants

Perkins is one of the more shifty running backs in this year's draft class. He has excellent vision and balance, and does not waste any time in the backfield. Perkins has great lateral movement and can embarrass opposing defenders in the open field. He catches the ball well, and the Giants' organization believes he is a complete running back. Rashad Jennings is 31 and Shane Vereen is more of a third-down back, which gives Perkins the perfect opportunity to see the field early in New York.

4. Derrick Henry – Titans

Henry is large. The Heisman winner out of Alabama stands 6'3" and weighs 247 pounds. Despite his size Henry is fast, running a 4.54 40-yard dash. He has the strength to break arm tackles and the speed to get past the secondary. The Titans selected Henry in the second round of this year's NFL draft, despite trading for DeMarco Murray this offseason. HC Mike Mularkey is looking to get more physical up front to help second year quarterback Marcus Mariota develop. Henry will likely be touchdown-dependent as the passing game is not his strong suit – he caught only 17 passes during his entire career at Alabama.

5. C.J. Prosise – Seahawks

Prosise is a converted wide receiver who made the switch to running back in his senior year with great success. He averaged 102.9 rushing yards per game and had 11 touchdowns in 10 games. Prosise does well with the ball in his hands and forced missed tackles on 38.6 percent of his opportunities. Seahawks' 2015 rookie sensation Thomas Rawls is coming off a broken ankle and will have to show that he is capable of handling a larger workload. With Prosise already lining up at wide receiver, look for him to contribute to your dynasty squad in more than one way.

6. Devontae Booker – Broncos

Booker is a very versatile running back with excellent vision and lateral agility. He can catch the ball very well and makes defenders miss in the open field. Team Vice-President John Elway recently said that Booker was their second-rated running back in this class, but will likely start the year behind newly re-signed C.J. Anderson. Booker's biggest concern is that he will be a 24-year-old rookie coming off surgery for a torn meniscus. Even with those red flags he has a chance to produce in Year 1 and could supplant Anderson if the latter struggles.

7. Keith Marshall – Redskins

His college career was derailed by injury, but Marshall ran the fastest 40 time at the combine amongst running backs with a 4.31. He had an excellent freshman year at Georgia before tearing his ACL his sophomore year. There is a lot of rust as Marshall hasn't played for what is essentially two years. Marshall says that he is healthy and ready to show the world that can he can be a player at the next level. He has great size, speed, agility, strength and balance. Matt Jones is penciled in as the starter in DC, but I believe that a healthy Marshall could end up grabbing the role sooner rather than later.

8. Kenyan Drake – Dolphins

Drake was a surprise pick in this year's NFL draft as the third running back coming off the board. The Dolphins must like him a lot, but his tape leaves me with a lot of questions. Drake is a quick and shifty back and showed that can he be a threat with the ball in his hands. Drake catches the ball well but will surely start his career as a change of pace back behind Jay Ajayi as the team looks to get him on the field. Drake has the athleticism to compete at the next level and with good coaching will likely be an immediate contributor on passing downs.

9. Jordan Howard – Bears

Howard is ranked here based mostly on opportunity, as he should have a chance to compete with sophomore running back Jeremy Langford, who is penciled in as the Bears' starter. Howard has good size, vision and power but is a one-dimensional back who will likely only play on first and second downs. He's a north/south runner who will rely on carries and touchdowns. The upside is limited with Howard, and it's hard for me to envision him beating out Langford. That being said, if you are desperate for running back help he might be worth a gamble given this year's weak rookie class.

10. Jonathan Williams – Bills

If it wasn't for foot surgery last year Williams would've been drafted much higher than the fifth round. He is a big running back who runs very well for his size, breaking tackles along the way. LeSean McCoy is getting older, and while Karlos Williams looked great in his limited opportunities last year, we all know the running back position is very fluid. If Williams gets a shot he may be able to hold on to the starting gig given his talent. The bigger questions are if that shot will come and, as a dynasty owner, if you can afford to wait.

Wide Receivers

1. Laquon Treadwell – Vikings

With long arms, excellent hands and above-average body control, Treadwell is a large and muscular player that dominates 50/50 balls as he uses his great balance and power to out-muscle defenders. He may not be the fastest receiver on the field, but he can be dominant.

The Vikings lacked a true No. 1 receiver, but this year's youngest wideout is going to change that and the first-rounder will make his presence known early. A great addition to any dynasty team, Treadwell will help your team for years to come.

2. Corey Coleman – Browns

Coleman is fast and has a nose for the end zone, with the ability to get behind defenses in a hurry. He was the first wide receiver selected in this year's NFL draft for a reason, and he should step in as the Browns' No. 1 receiving option from day 1. There is no reason to think that he will not see 100-plus targets in Year 1 as the team has jettisoned most of its veteran players at the position. Coleman will be able to offer many dynasty lineups immediate help.

3. Josh Doctson – Redskins

Doctson has excellent leaping ability, body control and hands. He is a highlight-reel receiver with great focus who has no trouble making the off-target catch. The Redskins lacked youth at wide receiver and selected Doctson in the first round to be the long-term future at the position. He will need to polish his route running but will be the team's No. 1 receiver in a relatively short period of time. It wouldn't be surprising if five years from now Doctson ended up being the top wide receiver from this class. He has the tools to be a game changer.

4. Michael Thomas – Saints

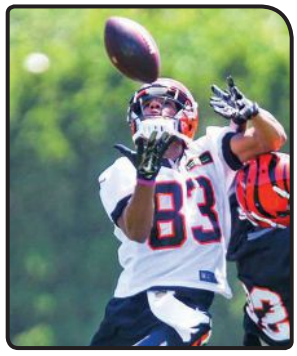
Thomas has the ideal NFL frame for a wide receiver, and he uses his size to make plays after the catch. He lands in a terrific spot paired up with All Pro quarterback Drew Brees, and will fill in for the recently departed Marques Colston. Thomas has good hands and body control, which he displayed while making some nice toe-tapping catches at Ohio State. He also has NFL blood lines as the nephew of former No. 1 overall pick Keyshawn Johnson. The Saints' staff has already stated that they plan to use Thomas early, making him a viable option for your starting lineup in Week 1.

5. Sterling Shepard – Giants

Shepard is small but has a thick build and some of the best hands in this year's draft class. He is elusive, quick, and is not afraid to make the tough catch over the middle. The Giants have no one behind Odell Beckham except the perennially-injured Victor Cruz. They love to pass the ball and were tied with the Patriots last year for throwing the most touchdown passes. Shepard will likely see a ton of targets, making him a viable option for your dynasty team out of the gate. The touchdowns may not be immediately abundant, but the catches should especially make owners in PPR leagues smile.

6. Tyler Boyd – Bengals

Boyd was a three-year starter at Pittsburgh and left as the school's all-time leader in yards and receptions, topping records once held by Larry Fitzgerald. He is a good route-runner with a quick release off the line who attacks the ball. He has great hands, body control and hand-eye coordination. Boyd played inside, outside, in the slot and even some running back in college, meaning that he can line up anywhere on the field for a Bengals club who lost their No. 2 and No. 3 WRs in free agency. Boyd may not be great, but he has talent and joins a great offense in Cincinnati. Boyd could be a consistent WR3 for many years.



7. Leonte Carroo – Dolphins

Carroo didn't land in the most ideal spot given the Dolphins' depth at wide receiver, but you can't pass up his talent. Carroo is a strong, muscular wide receiver with good leaping ability and excellent hands. He had some off-field concerns that may have led to him falling a little in the draft. There is a lot of Anquan Boldin in Carroo's game, which leaves the door open for a solid career as long as he sees enough targets behind young and talented teammates Devante Parker and Jarvis Landry.

8. Will Fuller – Texans

I am very reluctant to put Fuller here, as I am not a fan. He was the second receiver off the board in this year's draft and has blazing speed. He high points the ball well, is quick off the line and was very productive in the open field while at Notre Dame. My biggest concerns are that he has small hands and dropped nearly 10 percent of his catchable balls. Even on catches he made I saw a lot of double clutching and body catches – skills which do not translate well to the NFL. I'm not saying that he is a bad football player, but I feel that he will be too inconsistent for me to put in my starting lineup every week.

9. Mike Thomas – Rams

Thomas wasn't even the first receiver the Rams selected in this year's draft, but he is one of my favorite dynasty sleepers. He can separate and make circus catches using his tremendous athleticism. He caught the highest number of contested passes amongst this year's top wide receivers, showing that he can out-muscle defensive backs, and his 2.98 yards per route run was best of any receiver in this class. Thomas is a little raw and came from a smaller school in Southern Miss, but there is very little talent ahead of him on the Rams' depth chart and he will have plenty of time to grow with Goff. A late-round pick in this year's rookie drafts, Thomas can end up being a diamond in the rough.

10. Rashard Higgins – Browns

Higgins is an excellent route runner, which helped him get open a ton in college. He's not blazing fast, but has good enough speed which he maintains out of his breaks. Light framed, he would benefit by putting on some weight during training camp but even so, he was never afraid to go over the middle. Higgins, who goes by the nickname "Hollywood," led the country in receiving in 2014 with 1,750 yards and 17 touchdowns (before losing quarterback Garret Grayson to the NFL), showing that he can be a big-time producer. The Browns desperately need receiver help and may have gotten a steal in Hollywood.

11. Braxton Miller – Texans

Miller is a converted quarterback with limited tape as he is still learning the position, but he has shown to be an explosive playmaker with the ball in his hands. He has excellent size, speed, elusiveness and athleticism. The Texans' receiving corps is thin behind superstar DeAndre Hopkins, leaving the door open for contributors, and it helps that Miller can line up all over the field. His opportunity will come down to how quickly Miller can learn the NFL route tree, but the two-time Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year showed to be a quick study, impressing scouts at the Senior Bowl.

12. Tajae Sharpe – Titans

Sharpe is a small school prospect who put up great numbers at UMass. He runs crisp routes, has excellent hands and good size, standing at 6'3". He has gotten some first-team reps during Titans' camp and joins a receiving corps that has little talent behind sophomore Dorial Green-Beckham. If Sharpe shows that he can compete at the next level, he has the chance to be a solid NFL possession receiver and can be a contributor to your dynasty team.

13. Jordan Payton – Browns

I know, another Browns' receiver, but when the team has nothing but rookies at the position we know that they will have an opportunity to produce. Payton leaves UCLA as the school's all-time leading receiver. He has good hands and forced 33 missed tackles on 148 receptions in two years. One of the top blocking receivers in this class, Payton does a lot of things well but really does nothing great. However, with a chance to crack the starting lineup in Cleveland, he is worth a late-round pick based on opportunity alone.

Tight Ends

1. Hunter Henry – Chargers

The 2015 John Mackey winner as the nation's top tight end, Henry was selected by the Chargers with the fourth pick in the second round of this year's draft. The heir apparent to future Hall of Famer Antonio Gates, Henry finds himself in a great position to become a top fantasy tight end. He has excellent hands, dropping zero balls in 2015 and only two the year before, showing his reliability. Henry also moves the sticks as 93 of his 116 catches resulted in either first downs or touchdowns. The tight end position can give you a big edge over your opponents, and Henry is a great one to grab for your team.

2. Austin Hooper – Falcons

The Falcons have been looking for a tight end ever since Tony Gonzalez retired and got a good one in Hooper. He has excellent hands and is not afraid to catch the ball in traffic. Tight ends have always thrived under offensive coordinator Kyle Shanahan, and with limited weapons in the passing game, look for the team to use Hooper as a weapon early. There is little talent in front of him so it wouldn't be a shock to see him open the season in the starting lineup. Tight ends usually take time to develop in the NFL, but with Hooper we should know early if we have a future star on our hands.

3. Tyler Higbee – Rams

Higbee was originally a wide receiver but finished his career at Western Kentucky as a first team All-Conference USA performer with eight touchdowns – tied for best in the FBS among tight ends. He was only a one-year starter and has some off-field concerns but has a very high ceiling. He has excellent hands, can make contested catches in traffic and possesses tremendous size to break tackles in the open field. The Rams are desperate for help in the passing game, and they landed a huge target in Higbee.

4. Seth DeValve – Browns

Princeton's highest-drafted player ever is a converted wide receiver that played all over the field in college. He was selected in the fourth round, which seems to indicate that the Browns have big plans for him as they overhaul their passing game. Reports out of camp are that DeValve looks fast and is catching everything thrown to him. In a weak tight end class you will be able to grab him at the back end of your rookie draft, and with a little patience might have a top-12 dynasty tight end on your hands in a couple of years.

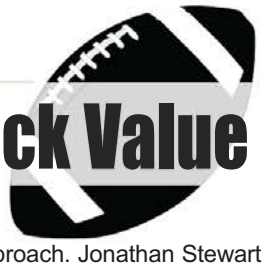
Systems And Schemes

The Key To Understanding Running Back Value



Tim Heaney, USA Today

A running back may have talent, but in the wrong situation, it might not matter in fantasy football.

Look at DeMarco Murray last year. Coming off his league-leading rushing year in 2014, Chip Kelly did not treat him as a feature back, instead favoring Ryan Mathews and Darren Sproles, better fits for his offensive design.

As the running back position dwindles in importance between committees and the NFL's general pass-happy direction, picking the right fantasy RBs becomes increasingly important.

Here, we rank the best systems for fantasy running back production, not necessarily the best backs.

1. Dallas Cowboys

This carefully, diligently built line is the league's best. Of course, production dropped off last year without DeMarco Murray. Darren McFadden was competent but hardly comparative. No. 4 overall pick Ezekiel Elliott could remind us of Murray, with huge volume and run-catch versatility. A healthy Tony Romo and Scott Linehan's play calling should return the ground game to its 2014 level (second in fantasy points per game, first in rushing yards).

Outlook: As a presumptive first-rounder, Elliott is fantasy's ultimate high-risk, high-reward pick. Whoever wins backup duty between Darren McFadden and Alfred Morris will show frequent flex value.

2. Arizona Cardinals

Probably last year's greatest improvement of any backfield, Arizona running backs led the league in PPR fantasy points. The addition of Mike Iupati to the offensive line bolstered the run, and now they add elite guard Evan Mathis. While aging quarterback Carson Palmer's pass protection has waned, bask in their transition to a powerhouse ground game with rising star David Johnson and capable backups Chris Johnson and Andre Ellington.

Outlook: Johnson's first-round hype will sizzle, but taking a chance on the other two in the middle rounds makes sense for flex options.

3. Seattle Seahawks

Many believe Marshawn Lynch's retirement ruins Seattle's potential. But they've been constantly rebuilding their front in recent years and have survived, thanks to adaptable offensive coordinator Darrell Bevell, secret weapon offensive line coach Tom Cable, and fleet-footed quarterback Russell Wilson's ability to open running lanes. Thomas Rawls, whose breakthrough last year ended after an ankle injury, should start camp as the lead back, with C.J. Prosise set as the main changeup option.

Outlook: Rawls' ADP may fall because of Prosise, which would make him much more attractive as a second back for your team. Given Rawls' injury, Prosise is a necessary handcuff, though he could contribute on his own even if both are healthy.

4. Carolina Panthers

Physical marvel QB Cam Newton opens up any running game to at-least-competent proportions. Mike Shula's offense has evolved into a churning, power-run approach. Jonathan Stewart enjoyed his best season in years plowing behind a line that includes emerging stud Trai Turner, Ryan Kalil and Andrew Norwell.

Outlook: Stewart hasn't a played a full season since 2011. Cameron Artis-Payne fell flat when given a chance last year but would gain fantasy allure if he were to receive another chance to carry the load. Kelvin Benjamin's return might tilt the run-pass balance a bit.

5. Kansas City Chiefs

Doug Pederson left, but this is Andy Reid's offense, which is all about ball control behind one of the league's most effective ground attacks. They survived Jamaal Charles' injury using a combination of Charcandrick West and Spencer Ware. KC now adds right tackle Mitchell Schwartz to help the run game. Despite his milquetoast fantasy output, possession-inclined quarterback Alex Smith serves a crucial role in enhancing the rushing attack.

Outlook: First-round candidate Charles was one of the league's best rushers in 2012, the last time he came back from ACL rehab. West and Ware, in that order, remain middle- and late-round speculations.

6. Pittsburgh Steelers

Todd Haley and Co. proved again to be adaptable as they played major chunks of 2015 without Ben Roethlisberger and Le'Veon Bell, whose season ended after Week 8 following several knee ligament tears. DeAngelo Williams stepped in without missing a beat and revived his career. The Steelers O-line also welcomes back vital center Maurkice Pouncey, who did not play a down last year.

Outlook: Watch Bell's recovery, but it's unlikely he'd drop past Pick 5. At 33 years old, Williams can't be counted on as a surefire handcuff.

7. Atlanta Falcons

The Dirty Birds had a soiled running game for years before Kyle Shanahan's arrival as OC last year. How'd it go? All he did was install his long-successful zone-blocking system (ZBS) and helped cultivate a star in Devonta Freeman. The line's interior is bound to improve with the big-money inking of high-impact center Alex Mack to pair with 2015 savior Andy Levitre.

Outlook: If Freeman, a first-round consideration, were to get hurt, Tevin Coleman would step in as a solid ZBS fit. He's worth a depth pick even if you don't own Freeman.

8. Buffalo Bills

LeSean McCoy disappointed in the touchdown department, but overall he, rookie Karlos Williams and deep gem Mike Gillislee embraced Greg Roman's run-centric offense. Former persona non grata Richie Incognito restored his rep as one of the league's premier left guards. Mobile quarterback Tyrod Taylor did his part to increase run efficiency, as well.

Outlook: This looks like another group effort that, while collectively being really good, will make weekly production a carousel. McCoy (high-end RB2) between the 20s, Williams (high-end flex) near the goal line, and Gillislee (great stash piece) mixing in for a little bit of both.

9. Philadelphia Eagles

Doug Pederson arrives after his successful tenure with the Chiefs to replace former HC Chip Kelly, who helped ruin DeMarco Murray's 2015. Ryan Mathews remains the team's clear No. 1, with Kenjon Barner and rookie Wendell Smallwood in line to see more reps if Darren Sproles decides to hold out. The young line must aid tackle Jason Peters, but Pederson's system could mask any deficiencies. Though Pederson criticized Kelly's backfield management, Pederson established his own multifaceted attack with KC and could bring that here.

Outlook: So. …maybe nothing changes? Mathews' injury-prone history makes the backup job one to watch. Sproles would have his own role in the passing game anyway. Smallwood or Barner could have major sleeper cred as fits in Pederson's scheme.

10. San Francisco 49ers

The retirement of tackle Anthony Davis will nick this line that, besides Joe Staley, doesn't have a lot going for it. But the arrival of Chip Kelly and his high-paced offense could make up for this weakness. Shifty but bulky Carlos Hyde (6-0, 235 pounds) missed the final nine games last season due to a stress fracture in his foot. He can excel in this system which will be jam-packed with stretch runs.

Outlook: If this line adapts quickly, and if he's in physical shape, Hyde has stud potential. The picture behind him is unclear (Mike Davis, Shaun Draughn, DuJuan Harris, rookie Kelvin Taylor) but should be watched entering camp.

11. New Orleans Saints

Center Max Unger's arrival last year was huge. That was a big reason Mark Ingram was one of the league's best backs. … when he actually was able to suit up. C.J. Spiller and Travaris Cadet might cannibalize each other for secondary work in passing situations. Drew Brees won't fade quietly into "game manager" territory, though.

Outlook: Ingram has first-round talent but far from that level of security. Spiller has upside as a changeup option, especially in PPR games.

12. Green Bay Packers

Eddie Lacy's extra layers hindered him, but not the solid O-line, especially on the interior with T.J. Lang. Tackle David Bakhtiari's return will help. James Starks did enough to hit holes properly. Now much trimmer, Lacy looks ready to repent. Jordy Nelson's return will keep defenses from pressing up more often on the run game, forcing them to focus on Aaron Rodgers.

Outlook: A third-round pick, Lacy could be one of fantasy's biggest steals. Starks still isn't a stud but is a useful depth grab.

13. Minnesota Vikings

You could give them a pass because they lost John Sullivan and Phil Loadholt before the season started. Still, Adrian Peterson didn't need much help. The run must work swiftly because of Teddy Bridgewater's shoddy downfield game.

Outlook: Peterson is a consideration for the No. 1 pick, even at age 31. Jerick McKinnon and Matt Asiata will be prime backups to own in the event Peterson cannot stay healthy.

14. Denver Broncos

C.J. Anderson and Ronnie Hillman return. Rookie Devontae Booker enters. Still a mess. If only a single entity could enjoy Gary Kubiak's typically stellar system for scampering. Left tackle Russell Okung comes in, but Ryan Clady and Evan Mathis exit. The front five could be a work-in-progress, especially when compounded by Denver's uncertain quarterback picture.

Outlook: Anderson maintains a slight lead for touches, but the O-line might not help any of the trio. Flex value everywhere here.

15. Oakland Raiders

Latavius Murray recorded last season's quietest 1,000-yard effort. Mike Tice continues to do fine work with the offensive line, which is headlined by weak-siders Donald Penn and Gabe Jackson. Murray will cede passing-down work to Taiwan Jones and Roy Helu, but he can also run powerfully out of the spread alongside Derek Carr.

Outlook: Murray could build even more on his soft breakout year, and either backup could help in-season if they're given more touches.

16. Cincinnati Bengals

Jeremy Hill and Giovani Bernard frustrated fantasy players, but as a duo formed one of the league's best backfields. Can Ken Zampese's appointment make up for the versatile Hue Jackson's departure? This offensive line is stellar enough that the run game could remain unaffected.

Outlook: Expect more of the same, with Hill and Bernard trading off great weeks as No. 2 fantasy backs.

17. Washington Redskins

Washington attempted to emulate their division-rival Cowboys by hiring Bill Callahan as offensive line coach. It led to mediocrity, and fantasy players had trouble guessing who'd excel from the backfield week-to-week. At least the depth chart is clearer this season with Matt Jones clearly occupying the No. 1 spot after Alfred Morris' departure.

Outlook: Jones' big-play ability slots him as a second fantasy back and helps him overcome his mediocre line. His backups don't really have much promise.

18. Chicago Bears

After Matt Forte's departure, Jeremy Langford -- one of fantasy's breakout names last year -- looks to lead the way. But Ka'Deem Carey and talented rookie Jordan Howard offer alternatives should he falter. Overall, though, HC John Fox's team will know how to run behind an offensive line that lost Matt Slauson but should remain steady.

Outlook: The dispersion of backfield touches makes this a dangerous fantasy situation, especially for those who overvalue Langford.

19. Los Angeles Rams

How many times will Jeff Fisher's power offense feed Todd Gurley? 300 times? 400? This mediocre line certainly won't help. Gurley was lucky to break a lot of big runs last year – he led the NFL with five runs of 40-plus yards, and finished second with 11 of 20-plus.

Outlook: Gurley is a stud despite his front's limitations. Tre Mason, Benny Cunningham and others cannot be in your fantasy sights unless a clear backup emerges in camp.

20. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Despite the line starting two rookies, Doug Martin ran for 1,402 yards in 2015, posting a 4.9 YPC average. He re-signed with the Bucs, and it actually might be a decent situation now that the line -- and quarterback Jameis Winston -- have more experience. Charles Sims' work as a pass-catching back also increased their production.

21. New York Jets

Though James Carpenter was a highlight last season, D'Brickashaw Ferguson has retired, and Nick Mangold has lost a step. Signing Ryan Clady at left tackle should help, but this is far from an ideal line. Luckily, Matt Forte makes his living through the air.

Outlook: Forte deserves second-round consideration in PPR leagues. Khiry Robinson is in sleeper mode for touchdowns. Doesn't hurt to tuck away Bilal Powell in deep leagues.

22. Houston Texans

Arian Foster's latest injury lassoed Houston last year. They could have a Fosterian punch with free agent signee Lamar Miller. Bill O'Brien tops any offensive mind from Miami. They need to build, but there's upside on the line: Rookie center Nick Martin could immediately offer more push.

Outlook: Almost any team Miller could've signed with would've been better than Miami. Miller is going to be a top-30 pick in many drafts. Alfred Blue is likely to get leapfrogged by rookie Tyler Ervin for the backup role.

23. New England Patriots

The offensive line has not protected Tom Brady or enhanced the interior run game in some time. LeGarrette Blount is mostly useful as a goal line back. Dion Lewis will return to make his living with receptions and YAC. When Rob Gronkowski isn't being the best receiving tight end, he's an elite blocking option, so that's a positive.

Outlook: Pats running backs are nothing more than flexes, other than Lewis in PPR formats.

24. Detroit Lions

Ameer Abdullah didn't look ready. Joique Bell broke down. Luckily, Theo Riddick's receiving ability helped Detroit tie for first with 135 RB receptions. Jim Bob Cooter's offense helped late in the year. Matthew Stafford will need stability from the running game to make up for Calvin Johnson's retirement. First-round right tackle Taylor Decker looks beastly.

Outlook: Abdullah (and this ground game overall) have sleeper potential, as their run-pass distribution should tilt more toward carries in 2016.

25. Baltimore Ravens

During OC Marc Trestman's debut, Justin Forsett and Javorius Allen, who stepped up after Forsett's IR trip, proved Matt Forte-like totaling 103 receptions. First-round pick Ronnie Stanley could join Eugene Monroe to form a stellar pair at tackle, but Monroe must stay healthy.

Outlook: Unwise to trust the soon-to-be 31-year-old Forsett as an every-week starter, though he's serviceable in PPR leagues. Allen is one of fantasy's best middle-round targets. Don't sleep on rookie Kenneth Dixon, who could be the most talented RB on the roster.

26. Tennessee Titans

They were one of the worst rushing attacks in 2016. But Marcus Mariota's feet open things up, and they've used a first-round pick on the line in three of the last four years. Enter DeMarco Murray and defending Heisman Trophy winner Derrick Henry. Murray could endure another frustrating distribution.

Outlook: There's upside here. Murray could deliver RB1 numbers, but more likely is a second tailback on fantasy rosters. Henry could be a frequent flex.

27. Cleveland Browns

Hue Jackson is set on Robert Griffin III as quarterback, which could help the backfield. If OC Pep Hamilton can restore normalcy, Isaiah Crowell and Duke Johnson look like a sleeper combo. Joe Thomas might be the NFL's best lineman, but losing Mitchell Schwartz and Alex Mack prompt this low ranking.

Outlook: Johnson and Crowell rank high in fantasy potential, but good luck picking which week to use which guy.

28. Miami Dolphins

Lamar Miller fled for his fantasy life after 2015. The line was putrid, and the midseason OC change did not help. But Adam Gase and Clyde Christensen's arrival should fix things. Raw talents Jay Ajayi and Kenyan Drake could become a thunder-lightning tandem.

Outlook: Ajayi is the better bet to score touchdowns, and Drake could be a Reggie Bush-like slasher. Regardless, neither is safer than a flex option.

29. New York Giants

Left tackle Will Beatty didn't suit up. Rookie Ereck Flowers was not prepared to fill in. Ben McAdoo's offense enhances the pass, not the run. Rashad Jennings rebounded with 4.4 yards per carry but isn't a lead back. Shane Vereen, Andre Williams and maybe rookie Paul Perkins could earn fleeting time.

Outlook: No Giants back should make fantasy owners jump to own one.

30. Jacksonville Jaguars

OC Greg Olson's run plan was almost non-existent in 2015 with T.J. Yeldon and Denard Robinson. The passing game leads this club. Basher Chris Ivory could change that, with Yeldon mixing in as a change-of-pace. Left tackle Luke Joeckel looks like a bust, unfortunately.

Outlook: Can't get much worse than last year, but it's not a good situation for Ivory, who at times was spoiled with the Jets. Expect a jarring fall back to earth.

31. San Diego Chargers

Their best running plays came after Danny Woodhead catches. He was the third-best PPR back last year. Melvin Gordon tanked as a rookie and had microfracture knee surgery in January. Can they actually find some consistency up front aside from Joe Barksdale -- maybe via new center Matt Slauson? When will Philip Rivers' arm fall off?

Outlook: Don't expect much of a complement to Rivers, besides Woodhead reprising his role as Rivers' favorite backfield target.

32. Indianapolis Colts

Frank Gore is 34 years old. Robert Turbin and Jordan Todman show flashes but not consistently. This offensive line is better built for the pass. It's going to be Andrew Luck's show again, even as he adapts to his third offensive coordinator in five years.

Outlook: Expect one of the lowest run-to-pass ratios, and Gore looks to only be a low-ceiling, risky-floor second fantasy back.

CHICAGO BEARS
Off-Season Grade: C+

KEY Acquisitions: S Omar Bolden, LS Aaron Brewer, T Nate Chandler, ILB Jerrell Freeman, DT Akiem Hicks, QB Brian Hoyer, G Ted Larsen, T Bobby Massie, ILB Danny Trevathan

KEY Losses: TE Martellus Bennett, T Jermon Bushrod, G Vladimir Ducasse, RB Matt Forte, DT Bruce Gaston, S Anthony Jefferson, DE Jarvis Jenkins, LB Shea McClellin, G Patrick Omameh, LB LaRoy Reynolds, S Antrel Rolle, G Matt Slauson, DT D'Anthony Smith

The story of the Bears' offseason was more about who departed than any splashy additions. Tight end Martellus Bennett was dealt to New England, with the Bears rewarding Zach Miller for his breakout season with a two-year, $5.5 million deal. Running back Matt Forte signed with the Jets as a free agent, leaving Jeremy Langford as the lead dog in a backfield that is likely to see touches spread around more.

The offensive line did gain a new right tackle in Bobby Massie, who received a three-year, $18 million deal to depart Arizona, and rookie left guard Cody Whitehair. That was more than offset by the release of left tackle Jermon Bushrod, who will be replaced by the inexperienced Charles Leno. The Bears also must feel like they received another first-round pick with wide receiver Kevin White returning after missing his entire rookie season with a shin injury.

This year's first-rounder was spent on linebacker Leonard Floyd, who likely will contribute as a pass rush specialist early on. Linebacker Danny Trevathan was also signed away from Denver (four years, $24.5 million) and another trio of solid veterans were added in defensive tackle Akiem Hicks (Patriots), inside linebacker Jerrell Freeman (Colts) and safety Omar Bolden (Broncos). First-round bust linebacker Shea McClellin signed with the Patriots, while safety Antrel Rolle was among six veterans released. The linebacking corps does look far more solid, although questions persist in the back end of the secondary where Bolden, Chris Prosinski, Adrian Amos and rookie Deon Bush will compete for the safety jobs.

JEREMY LANGFORD

DETROIT LIONS
Off-Season Grade: B–

KEY Acquisitions: CB Johnson Bademosi, LB Jon Bostic, S Rafael Bush, WR Andre Caldwell, DT Stefan Charles, DE Wallace Gilberry, LB Zaviar Gooden, WR Marvin Jones, WR Jeremy Kerley, TE Matthew Mulligan, RB Stevan Ridley, WR Andre Roberts, G Geoff Schwartz, CB Darrin Walls, S Tavon Wilson

KEY Losses: S Isa Abdul-Quddus, RB Joique Bell, WR Calvin Johnson, DE Jason Jones, LB Travis Lewis, CB Rashean Mathis, G/C Manny Ramirez, DE C.J. Wilson

Megatron has left the building, and there was nothing the front office could do to persuade Calvin Johnson not to retire. So the attention shifted to replacing the best wide receiver in franchise history as best they could. That came in the form of signing former Bengals wideout Marvin Jones to a five-year, $40 million that includes $20 million in guaranteed money. The front office also added veterans Jeremy Kerley and Andre Roberts to compete for snaps behind Jones and Golden Tate.

The backfield will also have a new look, with Stevan Ridley replacing Joique Bell as the complement to Ameer Abdullah. Blocking for them and protecting franchise quarterback Matthew Stafford will be first-round pick Taylor Decker, whom the team hopes can jump in at the left tackle spot and allow Riley Reiff to return to the right side.

After finishing 23rd in points allowed last season, the defense received some reinforcements. Defensive tackle A'Shawn Robinson was viewed as a steal by many as a second-round pick out of Alabama who can clog rushing lanes. Stefan Charles provides even more depth along the defensive interior as a free agent pickup from Buffalo, while linebacker Jon Bostic was acquired from the Patriots to serve behind Stephen Tulloch for now and provide versatile insurance. Other than free safety Glover Quin, the secondary has plenty of question marks entering training camp. Tavon Wilson (Patriots) and Rafael Bush (Saints) will compete for snaps at safety, while the team chose not to upgrade at cornerback from Nevin Lawson opposite Darius Slay.

GREEN BAY PACKERS
Off-Season Grade: B

KEY Acquisitions: TE Jared Cook, OLB Lerentee McCray

KEY Losses: DE Josh Boyd, CB Casey Hayward, LB Andy Mulumba, LB Nate Palmer, NT B.J. Raji, QB Scott Tolzien

Packers general manager Ted Thompson has never been one to build his roster through free agency, and 2016 was no different as the team signed only two players -- tight end Jared Cook to pair with Richard Rodgers and reserve linebacker Lerentee McCray.

Thompson spent his efforts in re-signing seven of the team's own players and focusing on replenishing the depth chart through the draft after losing six players, headed by cornerback Casey Hayward (Chargers; four years, $15.3 million) and nose tackle B.J. Raji, who is sitting out the 2016 season to evaluate his future.

Raji will be replaced in part by first-round pick Kenny Clark, who will play in a rotation behind projected starters Mike Daniels and Letroy Guion. Second-round pick offensive tackle Jason Spriggs was a potential first-round talent selected with an eye on the future -- as three of the Packers' five starting offensive linemen are entering the final years of their contracts.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS

Off-Season Grade: B+

KEY Acquisitions: G Alex Boone, S Michael Griffin, LB Emmanuel Lamur, TE Brian Leonhardt, LB Travis Lewis, T Andre Smith

KEY Losses: S Robert Blanton, CB Josh Robinson, DE Justin Trattou, WR Mike Wallace

The Vikings believe they are on the cusp of being strong competitors for the NFC title over the next few years, and focused their offseason on improving the cast around third-year quarterback Teddy Bridgewater. That included using the team's first-round pick on wide receiver Laquon Treadwell as a big target opposite dynamic 2015 rookie Stefon Diggs.

The offensive line also received reinforcements, with guard Alex Boone signed away from San Francisco and Andre Smith coming over from Cincinnati to serve as competition for right tackle Phil Loadholt, who missed all of last season due to an Achilles injury.

Three of the four players the Vikings "lost" during free agency came on defense (wide receiver Mike Wallace was released). But Minnesota won't sweat the departures of defensive end Justin Trattou, cornerback Josh Robinson or safety Robert Blanton.

STEFON DIGGS

Cornerback Mackensie Alexander was a steal in the second round, and plenty of veteran depth was added in the form of linebackers Emmanuel Lamur and Travis Lewis and safety Michael Griffin. And signing safety Harrison Smith to a long-term deal can't be overlooked.

DALLAS COWBOYS

Off-Season Grade: B–

KEY Acquisitions: C/G Joe Looney, DE Benson Mayowa, RB Alfred Morris, DT Cedric Thornton

KEY Losses: G Mackenzy Bernadeau, QB Matt Cassel, RB Robert Turbin

It was a quiet offseason by Jerry Jones' standards. Not that the Cowboys stood pat by any means, but the splashy moves that have marked so many previous free agent periods weren't there. The biggest headline grabber was in fact the team's decision not to bring back controversial defensive end Greg Hardy.

After not re-signing Hardy or Jeremy Mincey (with Demarcus Lawrence and Reandy Gregory facing a suspension to open the season), the pass rush is the biggest concern on the roster. Adding journeyman backup Benson Mayowa does little to ease that concern, and the Cowboys didn't draft a defensive end who can contribute this season until nabbing Charles Tapper in the fourth round (second-rounder Jaylon Smith is expected to miss 2016 while rehabbing from knee surgery).

Free agency did bring running back Alfred Morris to compete for snaps in what is now a crowded backfield with first-round pick Ezekiel Elliott and veteran Darren McFadden. Matt Cassel departed for Tennessee, leaving Kellen Moore and rookie Dak Prescott to compete to backup oft-injured quarterback Tony Romo.

The biggest addition via free agency was signing defensive tackle Cedric Thornton away from division-rival Philadelphia for four years and $17 million. He fills a need along the interior next to Tyrone Crawford.

NEW YORK GIANTS

Off-Season Grade: B–

KEY Acquisitions: QB B.J. Daniels, NT Damon Harrison, CB Janoris Jenkins, FB Will Johnson, CB Leon McFadden, RB Bobby Rainey, LB Keenan, Robinson, G Ryan Seymour, LB Kelvin Sheppard, T Byron Stingily, DE Olivier Vernon

KEY Losses: CB Prince Amukamara, DE Robert Ayers Jr., LB Jon Beason, T Will Beatty, TE Jerome Cunningham, DT Markus Kuhn, WR Rueben Randle, G Geoff Schwartz

Determined to overhaul a defense that finished last in total yards allowed (420.3 per game), passing yards allowed (298.9), 24th in rushing yards allowed (121.4) and 30th in points allowed (27.6), Giants general manager Jerry Reese went on an aggressive shopping spree as free agency began. That was headlined by committing a combined $193.25 million (including $93 million guaranteed) to add nose tackle Damon Harrison (Jets), cornerback Janoris Jenkins (Rams) and defensive end Olivier Vernon (Dolphins).

Vernon upgrades the pass rush opposite Jason Pierre-Paul with Robert Ayers signing a three-year, $19.5 million deal with Tampa Bay, Harrison is one of the league's top run-stuffing interior linemen, and the ballhawking Jenkins replaces Prince Amukamara, who signed a one-year deal with Jacksonville. Reese also used the 10th overall pick on Ohio State cornerback Eli Apple, an excellent athlete who may need a year to acclimate to the NFL. Veteran linebackers Keenan Robinson (Redskins) and Kelvin Sheppard (Dolphins) were also added while Jon Beason retired.

The offense was in much better shape and is hopeful of a return from wide receiver Victor Cruz following two seasons lost to injury. He's needed after Rueben Randle signed a one-year deal with Philadelphia. Sterling Shepard was selected in the second round and will compete for the third receiver job with Dwayne Harris and Geremy Davis.

PHILADELPHIA EAGLES

Off-Season Grade: B

KEY Acquisitions: LB Nigel Bradham, G Brandon Brooks, CB Ron Brooks, QB Chase Daniel, WR Chris Givens, WR T.J. Graham, DT Mike Martin, CB Leodis McKelvin, S Rodney McLeod, WR Rueben Randle, G/C Stefen Wisniewski

KEY Losses: LB Kiko Alonso, DE Brandon Bair, CB E.J. Biggers, WR Riley Cooper, QB Thad Lewis, CB Byron Maxwell,

C David Molk, RB DeMarco Murray, LB DeMeco Ryans, QB Mark Sanchez, DT Cedric Thornton

The Eagles parted ways with lightning rod coach Chip Kelly but couldn't manage to avoid the drama that has encumbered the franchise for years. Doug Pederson was brought in from Kansas City, and Philadelphia overpaid to re-sign quarterback Sam Bradford to a two-year, $35 million deal with $26 million guaranteed, only to trade up to select Carson Wentz with the No. 2 overall pick in the draft.

That triggered a short but silly holdout by Bradford, who by mid-June claimed Pederson to be a "class act" and all around "great guy." Bradford is likely to hold the baton for at least one more year while Wentz gets acclimated to the NFL, while also handing off primarily to Ryan Mathews after DeMarco Murray was shipped off to Tennessee following a disastrous one-year stint. Backup quarterback Mark Sanchez was also shuttled off to Denver, with Pederson bringing in Chase Daniel from Kansas City to serve as Bradford's primary backup.

Other changes on offense included the release of wide receiver Riley Cooper, with Rueben Randle brought in from the Giants (one year, $1.025 million) along with veterans Chris Givens (Ravens; one year, $840,000) and T.J. Graham (Saints; one year, $675,000). Guard Brandon Brooks received a three-year, $5.5 million deal to leave Houston, while center Stefen Wisniewski (Jaguars; one year, $1.51 million) will push Jason Kelce, who is coming off a down year.

The biggest move on defense was re-signing lineman Fletcher Cox to a six-year, $102 extension, locking up the cornerstone through 2022. Fellow tackle Cedric Thornton received a four-year, $17 million deal from Dallas, while linebacker Kiko Alonso and cornerback Byron Maxwell were dealt to Miami to shed the team of two more flameouts from the Kelly era. Veterans Ron Brooks and Leodis McKelvin were added from Buffalo to increase the secondary depth, while safety Rodney McLeod was given a five-year, $37 million deal to leave the Rams.

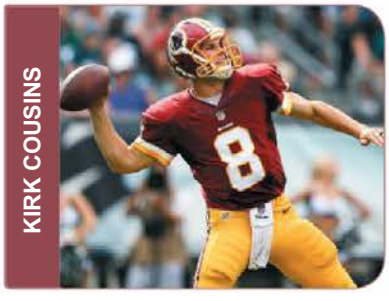
WASHINGTON REDSKINS

Off-Season Grade: B+

KEY Acquisitions: S David Bruton Jr., TE Vernon Davis, LB Terence Garvin, DL Ziggy Hood, CB Josh Norman, NT Jerrell Powe, DE Kendall Reyes, CB Greg Toler

Key Losses: T Tom Compton, CB Chris Culliver, S Dashon Goldson, QB Robert Griffin III, DE Jason Hatcher, LB Jackson Jeffcoat, S Jeron Johnson, DL Frank Kearse, NT Terrance Knighton, RB Alfred Morris, RB Silas Redd, WR Andre Roberts, LB Keenan Robinson

Flash back 12 months, and the Redskins were entering a tumultuous training camp with sides divided as coach Jay Gruden committed to unproven Kirk Cousins as his quarterback while relegating Robert Griffin III to the bench. A year later, Cousins has proven himself worthy of a long-term commitment, and the focus is on filling out a roster that was good enough to win the weak NFC East in 2015.



KIRK COUSINS

RG3 is now in Cleveland, and a host of veterans were released, including cornerback Chris Culliver, safeties Dashon Goldson and Jeron Johnson, defensive end Jason Hatcher, linebacker Jackson Jeffcoat and linebacker Keenan Robinson. Other significant names to move on were running back Alfred Morris (Cowboys; two years, $3.5 million) and defensive linemen Frank Kearse and Terrance Knighton, who both signed with New England as free agents.

The Redskins made a big splash in free agency when they jumped in to scoop up cornerback Josh Norman with a five-year, $75 million deal after Carolina pulled its franchise tag on the All-Pro. He's a huge boost to a defense that was 25th against the pass last season and was in desperate need of a lockdown corner opposite Bashaud Breeland. The secondary also added safety David Bruton Jr. (Broncos; three years, $9 million) and cornerback Greg Toler (Colts; one year, $840,000).

The lone free agent addition to the offense was tight end Vernon Davis to pair with emerging star Jordan Reed, while wide receiver Josh Doctson was selected with the 22nd overall pick to groom behind veterans DeSean Jackson and Pierre Garcon.

ATLANTA FALCONS

Off-Season Grade: B

KEY Acquisitions: T Tom Compton, C Alex Mack, LB LaRoy Reynolds, QB Matt Schaub, WR Mohamed Sanu, DE Derrick Shelby, LB Courtney Upshaw, LB Sean Weatherspoon

KEY Losses: LB Justin Durant, C/G Gino Gradkowski, CB Travis Howard, FB Collin Mooney, S William Moore, DT Paul Soliai, WR Roddy White

The Falcons' offense propelled the team to a 6-1 start last season, then struggled to adjust when defenses got tape on coordinator Kyle Shanahan's scheme and communication issues escalated. Veteran wide receiver Roddy White was released and replaced by Mohamed Sanu (Bengals; five years, $32.5 million), while the offensive line received a strong upgrade in the form of center Alex Mack. Backup quarterback Matt Schaub, who began his career with the Falcons and played in Shanahan's system in Houston, was added to help starter Matt Ryan.

The other significant moves were focused on the defense, which improved greatly in finishing 16th in total yards allowed and 14th in points allowed in 2015. Defensive end Derrick Shelby was signed from the Dolphins (four years, $18 million) while linebackers Courtney Upshaw (Ravens, $1.25 million) and Sean Weatherspoon (Cardinals, $1.5 million) received one-year "prove-it" deals. Upshaw also saw some time at end during the off-season program.

Safety William Moore was among six veterans released, with rookie first-round pick Keanu Neal slated to get the first opportunity to replace him. Three of the team's top four draft picks were on the defensive side of the ball, including linebackers Deion Jones (second round) and De'Vondre Campbell (fourth round).

CAROLINA PANTHERS

Off-Season Grade: B+

KEY Acquisitions: C/G Gino Gradkowski, S Trenton Robinson, P Mike Scifres, DT Paul Soliai

KEY Losses: DE Jared Allen, T Nate Chandler, DT Dwan Edwards, S Roman Harper, CB Josh Norman, P Brad Nortman, C Fernando Velasco

The odd departure of cornerback Josh Norman after the team pulled the franchise tag will define the Panthers' 2016 offseason, not to mention impact their Super Bowl aspirations. Not only was Norman an All-Pro, he was a lockdown cover man in a secondary that started a December pickup in the Super Bowl. General manager David Gettleman appears comfortable entering the season with Bene Benwikere on one side and Robert McClain trying to fend off three rookies on the other after he didn't sign a single cornerback in free agency.

Defensive end Jared Allen retired, while fellow aging veterans defensive tackle Dwan Edwards (released) and safety Roman Harper (Saints) have moved on. Paul Soliai (Falcons; two years, $6.5 million) will offset the loss of Edwards along with first-round pick Vernon Butler.

Reserve offensive linemen Nate Chandler and Fernando Velasco were the only losses on the offensive side of the ball, with center/guard Gino Gradkowski signed to help replenish the depth. Gettleman's offseason was otherwise spent on retaining a few veterans such as end Charles Johnson, and trying to work out an extension for defensive lineman Kawann Short.

NEW ORLEANS SAINTS

Off-Season Grade: B

KEY Acquisitions: K Connor Barth,WR Vincent Brown, DT Nick Fairley, TE Coby Fleener, S Roman Harper, LB James Laurinaitis, LB Craig Robertson, LB Tony Steward, LB Nate Stupar

KEY Losses: CB Brandon Browner, S Rafael Bush, WR Marques Colston, G Jahri Evans, LB David Hawthorne, LB Ramon Humber, DE Phillip Hunt, FB Toben Opurum, RB Khiry Robinson, G Ryan Seymour, TE Benjamin Watson

The Saints were 31st against the run and pass and in total defense in 2016, and dead last in points allowed at 29.8 per game. So it's understandable why so much focus in the offseason was placed on that side of the ball.

Dennis Allen has replaced Rob Ryan as the coordinator, and personnel changes were made in the form of free agent defensive tackle Nick Fairley (Rams; one year, $3 million), linebackers James Laurinaitis (Rams; three years, $8.5 million) and Craig Robertson (Browns; three years, $5 million) and safety Roman Harper (Panthers; one year, $1.065 million). The Saints also added defensive tackle Sheldon Rankins with the 12th overall pick and traded back into the second round to grab Vonn Bell, who will compete for safety snaps along with Harper, Kenny Vaccaro and the oft-injured Jairus Byrd.

One impactful loss could be defensive end Hau'oli Kikaha, who was making the transition from linebacker when he suffered a torn ACL during an OTA practice. Cornerback Brandon Browner was released along with linebackers David Hawthorne and Ramon Humber and defensive end Phillip Hunt, while safety Rafael Bush signed with Detroit (one year, $1.5 million.).

The changes on offense began with the release of longtime standout receiver Marques Colston. Second-round pick Michael Thomas reminds many of a younger Colston, and veteran Vincent Brown was added for depth. With 35-year-old tight end Benjamin Watson signing with Baltimore, the Saints opened up the wallet to add Coby Fleener (Colts; five years, $36 million).

TAMPA BAY BUCCANEERS

Off-Season Grade: B+

KEY Acquisitions: P Bryan Anger, DE Robert Ayers Jr., DT A.J. Francis, CB Brent Grimes., QB Dan LeFevour, DE Cliff Matthews, CB Josh Robinson, LB Daryl Smith, G J.R. Sweezy

KEY Losses: K Connor Barth, LB Bruce Carter, G Logan Mankins, CB Sterling Moore, K Patrick Murray, RB Bobby Rainey

Dirk Koetter took over for ousted head coach Lovie Smith, and the hope is the young nucleus of offensive skill position players will drive the Bucs closer to being a playoff-caliber team. Guard J.R. Sweezy was signed away from Seattle (five years, $32.5 million) to replace the retired Logan Mankins and third-string running back Bobby Rainey signed with the Giants, but the vast majority of the personnel moves made were to address a defense that finished 26th in points allowed last year.

While linebacker Bruce Carter was released and cornerback Sterling Moore signed with Buffalo, several upgrades were made. It began in free agency with the signings of defensive end Robert Ayers Jr. (Giants; three years, $21 million), linebacker Daryl Smith (Ravens; one year, $2.5 million) and cornerback Brent Grimes (Dolphins; two years, $16.5 million), who are all projected starters, and reserve tackle A.J. Francis, end Cliff Matthews and cornerback Josh Robinson.

The defensive theme continued in the draft with the first-round selection of an in-state product, Florida cornerback Vernon Hargreaves III, and second-round defensive end Noah Spence, a one-time Ohio State recruit who could prove a steal if he continues to stay away from off-field issues. Trading up in the second round to nab a kicker in Roberto Aguayo will be heavily criticized unless he proves to be some kind of difference-maker over the next decade.

ARIZONA CARDINALS

Off-Season Grade: A–

KEY Acquisitions: C/G Taylor Boggs, S Tyvon Branch, CB Asa Jackson, OLB Chandler Jones, G Evan Mathis

KEY Losses: G Jonathan Cooper, S Rashad Johnson, G Ted Larsen, LS Mike Leach, T Bobby Massie, CB Jerraud Powers, DE Cory Redding, T Bradley Sowell, LB Sean Weatherspoon, CB Corey White

The Cardinals return every skill position player from an offense that finished first in total yards and second in points scored last season. There is some juggling along the offensive line, but general manager Steve Keim is confident veteran Evan Mathis is an upgrade at right tackle, where he will play alongside 2015 first-round pick D.J. Humphries, who essentially took a redshirt as a rookie to learn the ropes in the NFL. Humphries steps in for Bobby Massie, who signed a three-year, $18 million deal with Chicago.

Arizona also lost Ted Larsen to the Bears (one year, $1.65 million) while fellow guard Jonathan Cooper was traded to New England. The Cardinals were fine with giving the former first-rounder a change of scenery if it meant getting one of the league's most disruptive defensive ends in return. Chandler Jones comes over from the Patriots and provides a much-needed boost to the pass rush. Along with rookie Robert Nkemdiche, the Cardinals believe the defensive line is now a significant team strength, and their presence means Dwight Freeney will not return.

Also gone is some depth from the secondary, with cornerbacks Jerraud Powers (Ravens) and Corey White (Bills) and safety Rashad Johnson (Titans) signing elsewhere. Arizona filled in that depth by adding cornerback Asa Jackson from Baltimore and safety Tyvon Branch, a former starter for Oakland who played in Kansas City last season.

LOS ANGELES RAMS

Off-Season Grade: B

KEY Acquisitions: DE Quinton Coples, DT Dominique Easley, CB Coty Sensabaugh

KEY Losses: LB Daren Bates, TE Jared Cook, DT Nick Fairley, CB Janoris Jenkins, LB James Laurinaitis, DE Chris Long, S Rodney McLeod, WR Nick Toon

The Rams' hectic offseason wasn't relegated to packing up the vans and moving the franchise to L.A. General manager Les Snead shook up the NFL Draft by moving up to the No. 1 overall spot to grab his franchise quarterback in Jared Goff, but even that came after a whirlwind free agency period.

The Rams cut ties with a pair of defensive stalwarts in former No. 1 overall pick Chris Long and linebacker James Laurinaitis. They also lost cornerback Janoris Jenkins to the Giants (five years, $62 million) and safety Rodney McLeod to the Eagles (five years, $37 million), while defensive tackle Nick Fairley signed with the Saints. That is a lot of playmaking to replace, along with two of the most vocal members of the defense in Laurinaitis and McLeod. Snead hopes defensive tackle Dominique Easley can fulfill his promise after getting cut by New England and cornerback Coty Sensabaugh comes over from the Titans (three years, $19 million) to help offset Jenkins' departure, but Los Angeles will look internally for McLeod's replacement among Maurice Alexander, Cody Davis and Christian Bryant.

Goff predictably struggled during the early part of the off-season program, but showed steady improvement and will be in a training camp battle against veteran Case Keenum for the starting job. The rest of the offense returns largely intact, minus tight end Jared Cook, who is now in Green Bay after being released. Snead did not sign a single offensive player in free agency but did use fourth-round picks on tight end Tyler Higbee and wide receiver Pharoh Cooper.

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS

Off-Season Grade: C+

KEY Acquisitions: G Zane Beadles, QB Thad Lewis

KEY Losses: G Alex Boone, G Jordan Devey, RB Kendall Gaskins, RB Jarryd Hayne, TE Brian Leonhardt

The 49ers' biggest move of the offseason was the one they didn't make. Many expected Colin Kaepernick to be attempting to resurrect his career in another NFL city this year, but after an offseason of swirling rumors he returns to the 49ers to compete with Blaine Gabbert for the starting quarterback job under new coach Chip Kelly. Kaepernick underwent surgeries to repair injuries to his left shoulder, right thumb and left knee, and the NFL world waits with anticipation to see how he adapts to Kelly's up-tempo scheme.

The offensive line lost guard Alex Boone to the Vikings (four years, $26.8 million), but general manager Trent Baalke replaced him with veteran Zane Beadles (Jaguars; three years, $11.75 million. The only other free agent addition was Thad Lewis, who will compete for the third quarterback job. It was a very quiet free agency period for the 49ers, who lost only Boone while releasing guard Jordan Devey, running back Kendall Gaskins and tight end Brian Leonhardt (running back Jarryd Hayne retired to pursue an Olympic spot in rugby). Wide receiver Anquan Boldin and running back Reggie Bush were two aging veterans Baalke did not attempt to re-sign.

The NFL Draft did bring defensive lineman DeForest Buckner, who was recruited by Kelly at Oregon, and guard Joshua Garnett in the first round. Facing salary cap issues, this is still a roster that likely needs a few more offseasons of replenishing before the 49ers can be considered a contender.

SEATTLE SEAHAWKS

Off-Season Grade: C

KEY Acquisitions: CB Brandon Browner, DE Chris Clemons, DT Sealver Siliga, T Bradley Sowell, G/T J'Marcus Webb, TE Brandon Williams

KEY Losses: T Alvin Bailey, LS Andrew East, DT A.J. Francis, LS Clint Gresham, OLB Bruce Irvin, WR Ricardo Lockette, RB Marshawn Lynch, DT Brandon Mebane, T Russell Okung, CB Mohammed Seisay, G J.R. Sweezy, DT Jesse Williams

The Seahawks have had to make some difficult choices the past two offseasons in deciding which starters to extend or re-sign and which ones to let walk away for big money in their next contracts. This year those decisions will significantly affect both sides of the ball.

One of the league's worst offensive lines from 2015 lost its two best players in left tackle Russell Okung (Broncos; five years, $53 million) and right guard J.R. Sweezy (Bucs; five years, $32.5 million). The team continues to have the ultimate confidence in offensive line guru Tom Cable, with former tight end Garry Gilliam moving from right tackle to the left side, second-year player Mark Glowinski taking over next to him while Justin Britt moves to center -- his third different spot on the line in as many years. First-round pick Germain Ifedi is penciled in at right guard, next to journeyman right tackle J'Marcus Webb, meaning all five spots have changed since the end of last season.

Change is also coming to the backfield with Marshawn Lynch hanging up his cleats. Thomas Rawls is in a race to return from his fractured ankle, while rookie C.J. Prosise will battle veteran Christine Michael for playing time during the preseason. General manager John Schneider to manage to re-signed wide receiver Jermaine Kearse, keeping quarterback Russell Wilson's arsenal intact, including tight end Jimmy Graham returning from knee surgery.

The defense lost linebacker Bruce Irvin to the Raiders (four years, $37 million), while stalwart defensive tackle Brandon Mebane is now in San Diego (three years, $13.5 million). Defensive end Chris Clemons returns following two seasons in Jacksonville, while cornerback Brandon Browner also returns to Seattle after stints with New England and New Orleans the past two seasons. Coach Pete Carroll envisions a cornerback/safety hybrid role for Browner, who will be 32 entering the season.

BALTIMORE RAVENS

Off-Season Grade: B–

KEY Acquisitions: G Vladimir Ducasse, QB Josh Johnson, CB Jerraud Powers, RB Trent Richardson, WR Mike Wallace, TE Benjamin Watson, S Eric Weddle

KEY Losses: WR Marlon Brown, TE Chase Ford, WR Chris Givens, S Will Hill, T Eugene Monroe, T/G Kelechi Osemele, QB Matt Schaub, LB Daryl Smith, S Brynden Trawick, LB Courtney Upshaw, CB Tray Walker

Last year's dismal 5-11 season aside, the Ravens are confident they have the ability to rebound quickly and be competitive in 2016. With several key players recovering from off-season surgeries and expected to be healthy by training camp, general manager Ozzie Newsome took a measured approach to free agency.

Baltimore lost offensive lineman Kelechi Osemele (Raiders; five years, $58.5 million), but signed Vladimir Ducasse to compete for a starting job. Ronnie Stanley, the sixth overall pick, will step in from Day 1 at left tackle after the team released Eugene Monroe in June. Newsome took a flier on former first-round bust Trent Richardson to compete for snaps at RB against Justin Forsett, Buck Allen and Terrance West, and a pair of veterans were added to support the passing game in wide receiver Mike Wallace and tight end Benjamin Watson.

The big move on defense was adding safety Eric Weddle, who signed a three-year, $26 million deal as a free agent from San Diego. He will help solidify a secondary that wasn't nearly as solid as Baltimore's No. 10 ranking in pass defense last year may indicate. Cornerback Jerraud Powers was also signed and will be in the mix with a host of others to compete for the spot opposite Lardarius Webb.

While the offseason lacked sizzle, Newsome's biggest gains will be getting the likes of quarterback Joe Flacco (knee), Forsett (arm), wide receiver Steve Smith (Achilles), pass rusher Terrell Suggs (Achilles) and tight end Crockett Gillmore (both shoulders) back in the lineup after finishing last season with a league-high 20 players on injured reserve.

CINCINNATI BENGALS

Off-Season Grade: C

KEY Acquisitions: CB Chykie Brown, LB Karlos Dansby, WR Brandon LaFell, S Taylor Mays

KEY Losses: DE Wallace Gilberry, LB A.J. Hawk, WR Marvin Jones, LB Emmanuel Lamur, S Reggie Nelson, WR Mohamed Sanu, T Andre Smith

The Bengals were extremely quiet during the offseason, doing their best to keep a strong playoff roster intact while bringing in only four free agents. Of those, veteran wide receiver Brandon LaFell figures to have the biggest impact as he steps in following the free agent defections of Marvin Jones (Lions; five years, $40 million) and Mohamed Sanu (Falcons; five years, $32.5 million). The Bengals also added wideout Tyler Boyd in the second round and Cody Core in the sixth as they reworked the receiving depth chart behind A.J. Green. Right tackle is likely to be manned by Eric Winston after Andre Smith departed for Minnesota.

Defensively, Cincinnati lost end Wallace Gilberry to the Lions (one year, $1.25 million), released A.J. Hawk and saw fellow linebacker Emmanuel Lamur leave for a one-year, $5.5 million deal with Minnesota. But the biggest loss was safety Reggie Nelson leaving for a two-year, $8.5 million deal in Oakland. That leaves a potentially big void, with 2015 sixth-round pick Derron Smith and Shawn Williams competing for the spot opposite George Iloka. The biggest free agent addition to the defense was linebacker Karlos Dansby, who is slated to start on the strong side. The Bengals also selected cornerback William Jackson III in the first round, with veteran Leon Hall not tendered as a free agent and a possible candidate to move to safety if he returns.

CLEVELAND BROWNS

Off-Season Grade: C

KEY Acquisitions: T Alvin Bailey, , LB Demario Davis, QB Robert Griffin III, LB Jackson Jeffcoat, K Patrick Murray, S Rahim Moore, CB Eric Patterson, LB Justin Tuggle

KEY Losses: CB Johnson Bademosi, WR Travis Benjamin, WR Dwayne Bowe, LB Karlos Dansby, TE Jim Dray, CB Ifo Ekpre-Olomu, FS Tashaun Gipson, WR Brian Hartline, C Alex Mack:, QB Johnny Manziel, LB Craig Robertson, RT Mitchell Schwartz, LB Scott Solomon, DE Randy Starks, S Donte Whitner

Queue another overhaul for the Browns, who cleaned house after crashing and burning again in a 3-13 2015 season. In is new coach Hue Jackson, who brings a strong offensive mentality and who was instrumental in reshaping elements of the roster.

Jackson had no time for Johnny Manziel's act and feels strongly enough about his reclamation project in Robert Griffin III that the Browns traded out of the No. 2 spot and a chance to nab Carson Wentz, instead opting to enter training camp with RG3 and veteran Josh McCown competing for the starting job (with Austin Davis, Connor Shaw and rookie Cody Kessler competing for the third spot). It's a big gamble by Jackson, whose tenure could ultimately be judged by how RG3 pans out in his offense.

COREY COLEMAN

The Browns have significant turnover throughout the roster. On offense alone, center Alex Mack exercised his opt-out to flee to Atlanta, guard Mitchell Schwartz departed for Kansas City and big-play threat Travis Benjamin bolted to San Diego (four years, $24 million) while fellow receivers Brian Hartline and Dwayne Bowe were released. With free agents not exactly banging down the door to relocate to Cleveland, the Browns' only significant offensive addition in free agency outside of RG3 was versatile offensive lineman Alvin Bailey. The team then spent its first-round pick on speed wide receiver Corey Coleman, who will be expected to contribute immediately in a receiving corps that is otherwise lackluster at best.

The defense lost both starting safeties with Tashaun Gipson signing with Jacksonville and Donte Whitner being released. Rahim Moore was signed away from Houston to occupy one spot, but the other is a question mark entering training camp. Defensive end Randy Starks and linebacker Karlos Dansby were also released as Cleveland shed itself of several aging veterans. With 12 draft picks in the fold, the truth is 2016 figures to be yet another year of transition in Cleveland.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS

Off-Season Grade: C

KEY Acquisitions: TE Ladarius Green, T Ryan Harris, TE David Johnson, LB Steve Johnson, DE Ricardo Mathews, RB Daryl Richardson

KEY Losses: T Mike Adams, CB Cortez Allen, T Kelvin Beachum, CB Antwon Blake, CB Brandon Boykin, LB Terence Garvin, FB Will Johnson, NT Steve McLendon, TE Heath Miller, LB Sean Spence, T Byron Stingily, RB Jordan Todman

The Steelers are confident they have the roster to compete for an AFC championship, but they did undergo significant off-season changes that bear watching. Primary among them was the retirement of tight end Heath Miller and the suspension of wide receiver Martavis Bryant.

General manager Kevin Colbert addressed Miller's departure by signing athletic tight end Ladarius Green from San Diego (four years, $20 million), while second-year wide receiver Sammie Coates will be expected to compete with Markus Wheaton for the starting job opposite Antonio Brown. Tackle Mike Adams was released after failing his physical, while fellow tackle Kelvin Beachum signed with Jacksonville, so Colbert added Ryan Harris from the Broncos to compete with Alejandro Villanueva on the blind side.

On the other side of the ball, the cornerback depth chart has undergone a significant facelift that could determine how deep a run Pittsburgh can make. Cortez Allen was released while Antwon Blake (Tennessee) and Brandon Boykin (Panthers, since released) signed elsewhere. In steps first-round pick Artie Burns, a bit of a surprise selection at No. 25 overall out of Miami, to compete for snaps opposite William Gay (with Senquez Golden and Ross Cockrell). The loss of nose tackle Steve McLendon to the Jets (three years, $10.5 million) also leaves a significant question mark in the middle of the Steelers' 3-4 scheme, with Daniel McCullers penciled in as the starter.

BUFFALO BILLS

Off-Season Grade: B–

KEY Acquisitions: LB Lorenzo Alexander, S Colt Anderson, RB/KR Dri Archer, CB Javier Arenas, S Robert Blanton, LB Zach Brown, DT Leger Douzable, TE Jim Dray, RB Dan Herron, LB Jamari Lattimore, WR Greg Little, CB Sterling Moore, S Phillip Thomas, C Fernando Velasco, CB Corey White

KEY Losses: LB Nigel Bradham, CB Ron Brooks, DT Stefan Charles, RB Boobie Dixon, TE MarQueis Gray, WR Percy Harvin, WR Chris Hogan, QB Josh Johnson, CB Leodis McKelvin, LB Tony Steward, LB A.J. Tarpley, G Kraig Urbik, DE Mario Williams, DE Jarius Wynn

The Bills believe they're on the cusp of competing for a playoff spot, especially with Tyrod Taylor entering his second season as the starting quarterback and a host of talented skill position players around him. The offense lost a few complementary players during free agency, including wide receivers Percy Harvin and Chris Hogan, but replenished the depth chart by re-signing Leonard Hankerson and adding veteran Greg Little. The rest of the moves on offense were largely cosmetic for fantasy enthusiast, as the Bills focused on upgrading the personnel for coach Rex Ryan's defense.

Defensive end Mario Williams was released and signed with division-rival Miami. The Bills hoped rookie first-round pick Shaq Lawson would step into that role opposite Jerry Hughes, but he's out until at least midseason following shoulder surgery. The linebacker depth chart underwent the most changes, with Nigel Bradham signing a one-year deal with Philadelphia and Tony Steward and A.J. Tarpley released. The Bills used a second-round pick on Alabama linebacker Reggie Ragland, who will be expected to start immediately, and signed veterans Lorenzo Alexander, Zach Brown and Jamari Lattimore.

In the secondary, cornerback Ron Brooks also left for Philly (three years, $5.5 million) and long-time Bill Leodis McKelvin was released. Sterling Moore (Tampa Bay) and Corey White (Arizona) were signed for depth, with Ronald Darby, Stephon Gilmore and Nickell Roby comprising a solid top-3 cover men.

MIAMI DOLPHINS

Off-Season Grade: B

KEY Acquisitions: S Isa Abdul-Quddus, LB Kiko Alonso, DE Andre Branch, T Jermon Bushrod, CB Chimdi Chekwa, TE MarQueis Gray, DT Chris Jones, DE Jason Jones, CB Byron Maxwell, RB Isaiah Pead, RB Daniel Thomas, G Kraig Urbik, WR Griff Whalen, DE Mario Williams, T Sam Young

KEY Losses: DE Quinton Coples, T Jason Fox, CB Brent Grimes, WR Greg Jennings, WR Rishard Matthews, CB Brice McCain, RB Lamar Miller, DE Damontre Moore, DE Derrick Shelby, LB Kelvin Sheppard, CB Jamar Taylor, DE Olivier Vernon, TE Brandon Williams

The Dolphins are banking on their biggest off-season acquisition being new head coach Adam Gase, who takes over for ousted Joe Philbin. Gase is charged with helping propel quarterback Ryan Tannehill to the next level. Gase spent last season in Chicago after working with Peyton Manning in Denver and is considered an innovative offensive mind.

He'll have to be, because the Dolphins backtracked in skill position personnel around Tannehill. Gone is running back Lamar Miller, who left his hometown of Miami for a four-year, $26 million deal with Houston. Also out the door went underrated wide receiver Rishard Matthews (Titans; three years, $15 million). Miami is counting on second-year back Jay Ajayi -- whose long-term future is unknown due to a reportedly degenerative knee condition -- to step into the lead role in the backfield and for fellow second-year player DeVante Parker to emerge as a consistent playmaker in a passing game that includes Jarvis Landry and Kenny Stills. Tackle/guard Laremy Tunsil has also impressed early on after falling to the Dolphins at No. 13, and Alabama's Kenyan Drake could serve as a change-of-pace speedster in the backfield, so the news certainly isn't all bad.

Defensively, Mario Williams was added following his release by Buffalo, but at this stage in his career he represents a step back from Olivier Vernon, who signed a five-year, $85 million deal with the Giants. Fellow end Derrick Shelby also departed (Falcons; four years, $18 million. A trade with the Eagles landed linebacker Kiko Alonso and cornerback Byron Maxwell, who will take over for departed Brent Grimes (released).

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS

Off-Season Grade: A–

KEY Acquisitions: TE Martellus Bennett, CB E.J. Biggers, RB Donald Brown, G Jonathan Cooper, TE Clay Harbor, WR Chris Hogan, LB Ramon Humber, DT Anthony Johnson, DL Frank Kearse, DT Markus Kuhn, DE Chris Long, LB Shea McClellin, DT Terrance Knighton, WR Nate Washington

KEY Losses: LB Jon Bostic, WR Josh Boyce, TE Scott Chandler, DL Dominique Easley, LB Darius Fleming, LB Dane Fletcher, DT Akiem Hicks, DE Chandler Jones, DT Chris

Jones, DT Ishmaa'ily Kitchen, WR Brandon LaFell, CB Leonard Johnson, LB Eric Martin, LB Jerod Mayo, DT Sealver Siliga, WR Brian Tyms, LB Dekoda Watson, S Tavon Wilson

Most perennial Super Bowl contenders have to deal with other teams plucking talent off their rosters, but the Patriots' offseason featured a proactive approach to retooling the depth chart. Nine players were released, while defensive end Chandler Jones was shipped to Arizona in a surprising trade, and linebacker Jon Bostic was dealt to Detroit. Veteran linebacker Jerod Mayo retired, and four players were not tendered as free agents. Only defensive tackle Akiem Hicks (Bears; two years, $10 million) and safety Tavon Wilson (Lions; two years, $2.2 million) would fit in the category of players the Patriots truly "lost" off their two-deep.

New England continues to be a haven for veterans in search of a Super Bowl run. That includes tight end Martellus Bennett, who was acquired from Chicago to form a scary tandem with Rob Gronkowski. Guard Jonathan Cooper came over in the deal with Arizona and will compete for a starting job.

And a slew of veterans chose to come to New England to improve the depth almost across the board. That includes former No. 2 overall pick Chris Long from the Rams and former first-round pick Shea McClellin from the Bears. Other veterans who will have an opportunity to make an impact include wide receivers Chris Hogan (Bills) and Nate Washington (Titans), defensive linemen Frank Kearse (Redskins), Markus Kuhn (Giants) and Terrance Knighton (Redskins) and reserve running back Donald Brown (Chargers).

DION LEWIS

Off-Season Grade: B

KEY Acquisitions: TE Brandon Bostick, LB Bruce Carter, T Ryan Clady, RB Matt Forte, DE Jarvis Jenkins, NT Steve McLendon, CB Darryl Morris, RB Khiry Robinson, WR Jeremy Ross

KEY Losses: CB Antonio Allen, DE Stephen Bowen, LB Demario Davis, CB Antonio Cromartie, TE Jeff Cumberland, DT Leger Douzable, NT Damon Harrison, RB Chris Ivory, WR Jeremy Kerley, LB Jamari Lattimore, P Ryan Quigley, RB Stevan Ridley, TE Adrien Robinson, CB Darrin Walls

The Jets' offseason was dominated by the contract standoff with quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick, which continued unresolved into the final week of OTAs (and press time). Wide receiver Brandon Marshall didn't hide his decision to skip a week of OTAs as a show of solidarity for Fitzpatrick, and ultimately the two sides are expected to come to an agreement. Otherwise, the Jets will be looking at starting Geno Smith while developing rookie Christian Hackenberg -- not a situation the team's fans want to see unfold with an otherwise playoff-caliber roster.

Free agency brought a significant change in the backfield, with versatile veteran Matt Forte coming over from the Bears with a three-year, $12 million deal and taking over the lead role from Chris Ivory (Jaguars; five years, $32 million. Left tackle D'Brickashaw Ferguson retired, with the Jets replacing him with former first-round pick Ryan Clady, who was acquired from Denver after missing the 2015 season. Wide receiver Jeremy Kerley was released, with the Jets hoping second-year speedster Devin Smith can assume a bigger role along with Quincy Enunwa and rookie Charone Peake behind Marshall and Eric Decker.

The moves on defense weren't quite as headline-worthy, but should prove impactful nonetheless. The additions include defensive end Jarvis Jenkins (Bears; two years, $6 million) and nose tackle Steve McLendon (Steelers; three years, $10.5 million). McLendon was a key pickup with Damon Harrison getting a five-year, $46.25 million deal from the Giants. Cornerback Antonio Cromartie was released, while Antonio Allen signed with Houston. Buster Skrine will start opposite Darrelle Revis, but depth is a concern unless injury-plagued youngster Dee Milliner can finally step up.

HOUSTON TEXANS

Off-Season Grade: B+

KEY Acquisitions: CB Antonio Allen, G Jeff Allen, C/G Tony Bergstrom, RB Lamar Miller, QB Brock Osweiler, DL Devon Still

KEY Losses: G Brandon Brooks, DE Jared Crick, RB Arian Foster, TE Garrett Graham, QB Brian Hoyer, C Ben Jones, S Rahim Moore, CB Darryl Morris, ILB Justin Tuggle, WR Nate Washington

The Texans' offseason grade is almost entirely based on how much you believe in quarterback Brock Osweiler and running back Lamar Miller. After all, Houston committed $98 million in four-year deals for both free agents to form the backbone of the offense.

Osweiler has shown plenty of promise and is still only 25 years old, but he has also started a grand total of seven career NFL games and has thrown 11 touchdowns against six interceptions. Not a huge body of work by any means. Miller is also just 25 entering his fifth NFL season, and has proven many doubters wrong with consecutive seasons with 1,000-plus yards from scrimmage. He's not seen as a great runner between the tackles, but he has averaged 4.6 yards on 638 career carries and was underutilized by the Miami coaching staff last year.

Center/guard Tony Bergstrom was signed away from Oakland, and center Nick Martin will compete for a starting job after being selected in the second round. Meanwhile, the free agent defections can all be justified -- guard Brandon Brooks (Eagles, five years, $40 million) and center Ben Jones (Titans, four years, $17.5 million) received offers the Texans weren't willing to match, running back Arian Foster didn't contribute much at all last season and may be on his last legs, quarterback Brian Hoyer needed a change of address after his playoff debacle and the others were role players who can be easily replaced.

INDIANAPOLIS COLTS

Off-Season Grade: C–

KEY Acquisitions: WR Josh Boyce, CB Patrick Robinson, CB Jamar Taylor, RB Jordan Todman, QB Scott Tolzien, RB Robert Turbin, WR Brian Tyms

KEY Losses: S Colt Anderson, S Akeem Davis, TE Coby Fleener, ILB Jerrell Freeman, QB Josh Freeman, RB Dan Herron, C Khaled Holmes, WR Andre Johnson, QB Ryan Lindley, QB Matt Hasselbeck, S Dwight Lowery, LB Jonathan Newsome, LB Andy Studebaker, CB Greg Toler, LB Bjoern Werner

The biggest surprise of the Colts' offseason came when general manager Ryan Grigson and coach Chuck Pagano were both retained after it appeared for much of last season that an untenable working relationship had developed.

After that, it was relatively quiet on the free agent front -- at least in terms of acquisitions following last year's spending spree on aging veterans. Grigson made a few targeted strikes, with cornerback Patrick Robinson (UFA Chargers, $14 million over three years) and cornerback Jamar Taylor (trade, Dolphins) the only two acquisitions likely to compete for starting spots.

Free agency did bring a few notable departures, led by tight end Coby Fleener (Saints; five years, $36 million), inside linebacker Jerrell Freeman (Bears; three years, $12 million) and safety Dwight Lowery (Chargers; three years, $7.2 million). Meanwhile, wide receiver Andre Johnson was among several underperforming veterans who were released.

Grigson received praise for his selection of Alabama center Ryan Kelly in the first round, but the offensive line as a whole remains a concern -- especially with franchise quarterback Andrew Luck coming off an injury-shortened season. The backfield also lacks a home-run threat with aging Frank Gore and third-down back Robert Turbin leading the way, and the defense could stand an infusion of youth at pass rusher after 35-year-old Robert Mathis and 30-year-old Kendall Langford tied for the team lead with seven sacks last season.

JACKSONVILLE JAGUARS

Off-Season Grade: A

KEY Acquisitions: CB Prince Amukamara, T Kelvin Beachumr, G Mackenzy Bernadeau, FS Tashaun Gipson, RB Chris Ivory, DE Malik Jackson, G Jeff Linkenbach, P Brad Nortman, G Patrick Omameh, LB Bjoern Werner

KEY Losses: Bryan Anger, G Zane Beadles, DE Andre Branch, S Sergio Brown, DE Chris Clemons, RB Toby Gerhart., TE Clay Harbor, C Stefen Wisniewski, T Sam Young

It's debatable that no one enjoyed a better offseason than Jaguars general manager David Caldwell. It's not debatable that no one was more aggressive.

Caldwell had a good young nucleus of players, particularly on the offensive side of the ball. Feeling luxurious, he added running back Chris Ivory (Jets; five years, $32 million) to pair with T.J. Yeldon, and offensive tackle Kelvin Beachum (Steelers; five years, $44.5 million) to compete with former first-round pick Luke Joeckel on the left side.

But it was on defense where Caldwell got really aggressive.

ALLEN ROBINSON

That began with signing defensive end Malik Jackson away from the reigning Super Bowl champion Broncos with a six-year, $85.5 million deal, adding cornerback Prince Amukamara from the Giants and free safety Tashaun Gipson from the Browns. The Jags then used the fifth overall pick on cornerback Jalen Ramsey and a second-round flier on top-10 talent Myles Jack, a big-time playmaker rehabbing from a major knee injury.

Good luck convincing anyone the Jaguars will suffer greatly from this lot of free agent departures: punter Bryan Anger, offensive linemen Zane Beadles, Stefen Wisniewski and Sam Young, defensive ends Andre Branch and Chris Clemons, safety Sergio Brown, running back Toby Gerhart and tight end Clay Harbor.

We've seen these types of aggressive offseasons backfire in the past, but only hindsight can fault Caldwell for attempting to surround his young stars with the talent to make the Jaguars an immediate threat in the underwhelming AFC South.

TENNESSEE TITANS

Off-Season Grade: B+

KEY Acquisitions: CB Antwon Blake, QB Matt Cassel, TE Jerome Cunningham, S Rashad Johnson, C Ben Jones, WR Rishard Matthews, CB Brice McCain, RB DeMarco Murray, LB Nate Palmer, LB Sean Spence

KEY Losses: LB Zach Brown, S Michael Griffin, WR Damaris Johnson, LB Steve Johnson, C/G Joe Looney, DE Mike Martin: UFA Eagles, QB Zach Mettenberger, CB Coty Sensabaugh

The Titans addressed their most pressing need by adding right tackle Jack Conklin with the No. 8 overall pick in the NFL Draft, investing in the protection for franchise quarterback Marcus Mariota. That was a stated goal after Mariota missed four games as a rookie while taking 38 sacks in 12 starts and absorbing numerous hits.

The moribund running game that featured Antonio Andrews also received a massive upgrade with the acquisition of 2014 rushing champ DeMarco Murray and the addition of second-round pick Derrick Henry. Mariota was also provided an underrated asset in wide receiver Rishard Matthews (Dolphins; three years, $15 million), and Tajae Sharpe was an intriguing pickup in the fifth round.

The biggest departure came on defense, with cornerback Coty Sensabaugh leaving for a three-year, $19 million deal with the Rams. Antwon Blake (Steelers) and Brice McCain (Dolphins) were added, but the secondary does remain a concern -- don't be fooled by that No. 7-ranked pass defense from 2015. The Titans were blown out in many games and opponents chose to wear the clock down.

The defensive line wasn't addressed at all in free agency, leaving second-round nose tackle Austin Johnson as the lone significant addition as he competes for snaps with veteran Al Woods.

DENVER BRONCOS

Off-Season Grade: C

KEY Acquisitions: DE Jared Crick, TE Garrett Graham, T Russell Okung, WR DeVier Posey, CB Brandian Ross, QB Mark Sanchez, T Donald Stephenson, DL Phil Taylor, LB Dekoda Watson

KEY Losses: S Omar Bolden, LS Aaron Brewer, S David Bruton Jr., WR Andre Caldwell, T Ryan Clady., TE Owen Daniels, TE Vernon Davis, T Ryan Harris, DE Malik Jackson, TE Nick Kasa, QB Peyton Manning, G Evan Mathis, OLB Lerentee McCray, QB Brock Osweiler, T Tyler Polumbus, ILB Danny Trevathan, G Louis Vasquez

The Broncos won the Super Bowl, then proceeded to lose their top two quarterbacks in the span of four days. That Trevor Siemian, a 2015 seventh-round pick who has never attempted an NFL pass, is considered a legitimate contender for the starting job speaks to the risk John Elway is making. Rather than acquiring Colin Kaepernick or Sam Bradford, Elway opted for free agent pickup Mark Sanchez to compete with Siemian and bridge the gap to first-round pick Paxton Lynch.

Every Super Bowl roster gets hit with defections for greener pastures (and more green), with defensive end Malik Jackson (Jaguars), inside linebacker Danny Trevathan and guard

Evan Mathis (Cardinals) joining quarterback Brock Osweiler as significant names to walk out the door along with Peyton Manning's retirement. Elway hardly stood pat, adding left tackle Russell Okung to replace Ryan Harris (Steelers) and Ryan Clady (traded to Jets), and adding some veteran depth in offensive tackle Donald Stephenson, tight end Garrett Graham and defensive linemen Jared Crick and Phil Taylor.

Denver also re-signed a few key veterans, including defensive end Derek Wolfe, linebacker Brandon Marshall and running backs C.J. Anderson and Ronnie Hillman, while adding rookie fourth-round pick Devontae Booker to the backfield mix. Whether the Broncos can make a legitimate run at defending their title, however, will come down to how well Elway rolled the dice at quarterback.

KANSAS CITY CHIEFS

Off-Season Grade: C

KEY Acquisitions: S Stevie Brown, G Jordan Devey, LB Andy Mulumba, T Mitchell Schwartz, WR Rod Streater, WR Mike Williams

KEY Losses: S Husain Abdullah, G Jeff Allen, S Tyvon Branch, QB Chase Daniel, DE Mike DeVito, G Paul Fanaika, G Ben Grubbs, CB Sean Smith, T Donald Stephenson

The Chiefs were one of the quieter teams during free agency, signing only one projected starter (right tackle Mitchell Schwartz) while suffering some significant losses in guard Jeff Allen (Texans), safety Tyvon Branch (Cardinals), guard Ben Grubbs (released) and cornerback Sean Smith (Raiders).

Kansas City focused primarily on retaining its own pieces, re-signing outside linebacker Tamba Hali (three years, $21 million), defensive lineman Jay Howard (two years, $10 million), inside linebacker Derrick Johnson (three years, $21 million), offensive lineman Jah Reid (three years, $10.2 million) and backup running back Charcandrick West (two years, $3.6 million). The Chiefs also used their first draft pick on lineman Chris Jones, who will compete for a starting job on defense as a rookie.

While not making any splashy moves and losing the likes of Smith and Allen, Chiefs GM John Dorsey kept his playoff roster largely intact. He also focused on depth in key areas in the draft, bringing in cornerbacks KeiVarae Russell (third round), Eric Murray (fourth round) and D.J. White (sixth round), offensive lineman Parker Ehinger (fourth round) and wide receivers Demarcus Robinson (fourth) and Tyreek Hill (fifth).

OAKLAND RAIDERS

Off-Season Grade: A

KEY Acquisitions: LB Daren Bates, OLB Bruce Irvin, DE Damontre Moore, S Reggie Nelson, T/G Kelechi Osemele, CB Sean Smith, S Brynden Trawick

KEY Losses: LB Lorenzo Alexander, C/G Tony Bergstrom, DE Shelby Harris, LB Curtis Lofton, DE Benson Mayowa, S Taylor Mays, S Tevin McDonald, WR Jeremy Ross, WR Rod Streater, DE Justin Tuck, G/T J'Marcus Webb, S Charles Woodson

There are many reasons why the Raiders are a chic pick to be a contender in 2016, not the least of which is yet another strong offseason for general manager Reggie McKenzie.

The defense needed another pass rusher to complement Khalil Mack, so he went out and plucked Bruce Irvin away from the Seattle Seahawks. The unit also needed help in the secondary after finishing 26th against the pass in 2015, so he lured cornerback Sean Smith away from division-rival Kansas City and ball-hawking safety Reggie Nelson away from Cincinnati to fill the void created by Charles Woodson's retirement. The offense is in good shape, but he improved the protection up front by landing underrated and versatile guard/tackle Kelechi Osemele from Baltimore.

None of the free agent departures made much of a ripple, with offensive linemen Tony Bergstrom and J'Marcus Webb replaceable -- especially with Osemele in the fold. McKenzie then went out and had a strong draft, with safety Karl Joseph a sleeper pick by many analysts at No. 14 overall. He is slotted to start next to Nelson and could prove a steal if he can stay healthy. Second-round pick Jihad Ward brings depth, while third-round pick Connor Cook will immediately compete with Matt McGloin for the right to back up quarterback Derek Carr. It's all with competition in mind, and McKenzie continues to load up the Raiders' two-deep.

SAN DIEGO CHARGERS

Off-Season Grade: B

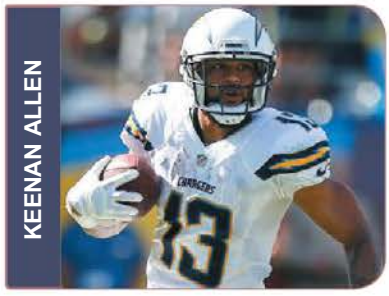
KEY Acquisitions: WR Travis Benjamin, CB Richard Crawford, TE Jeff Cumberland, CB Casey Hayward, S Dwight Lowery, DL Brandon Mebane, QB Zach Mettenberger, G Matt Slauson

KEY Losses: RB Donald Brown, LB Donald Butler, LB Kavell Conner, WR Malcom Floyd, TE Ladarius Green, TE David Johnson, G Jeff Linkenbach, DE Ricardo Mathews, DE Kendall Reyes, CB Patrick Robinson, CB Brandian Ross, P Mike Scifres, S Eric Weddle

After a disastrous 4-12 season in 2015 that was doomed by a slew of injuries and clear holes in several areas, general manager Tom Telesco set out with an aggressive offseason game plan.

With Malcom Floyd retiring, Telesco knew he needed a vertical threat opposite Keenan Allen, so he gave big-play threat Travis Benjamin a four-year, $24 million deal to leave Cleveland. With Eric Weddle departing, Telesco signed Dwight Lowery away from Indianapolis for three years and $7.2 million and beefed up the secondary depth with cornerback Casey Hayward from Green Bay. The defensive line received a big jolt to its run defense in tackle Brandon Mebane, who left Seattle for a three-year, $13.5 million deal.

The draft brought in Ohio State star Joey Bosa with the No. 3 overall pick, and he's expected to step in immediately on the left side. While Joey Bosa may not be an immediate stud as a pass rusher, his presence can only help outside linebacker Melvin Ingram on the other side of the line. The Chargers also re-signed offensive linemen Joe Barksdale and Chris Hairston and tight end Antonio Gates for at least one more run with Philip Rivers.



KEENAN ALLEN

What they lost can't be overlooked. It includes Floyd, Weddle, and tight end Ladarius Green (Steelers). Telesco believes he addressed those departures with Benjamin, Lowery and tight end David Johnson (Steelers), but there are still concerns in the secondary with aging Brandon Flowers slated to start opposite rising star Jason Verrett. The offensive line is also still a massive question mark after it was decimated by injuries in 2015. Telesco added center Max Tuerk in the third round and guard Donavon Clark in the seventh, but otherwise the personnel remains the same -- only with the hope they don't get hit by the same injury bug.

2016 Cheatsheets EXPERTS POLL

Fantasy football is chock full of vernacular. Buzz words. Lingo, even.

In fact, the very title of this magazine is one that gets used all the time. The "cheatsheet" – that most important of tools in the fantasy owners' arsenal.

Of course, it's also a bit of a misleading term. After all, by using a cheatsheet to rank fantasy options or availing yourself of the information contained within these pages, you're hardly cheating.

You're soaking in the fantasy knowledge of a group of fantasy experts, high-stakes contest winners and media personalities who have decades of combined experience playing fantasy football. Of winning at fantasy football.

If we weren't pretty good at what we do, we wouldn't be able to make a living doing it. We aren't politicians.

They have offered up strategy tips. Pointed out some over- and undervalued players ("Sleepers" and "Busts," for those who dig the lingo). Given their takes on everything from the impact of coaching changes to the incoming rookie class. Shown you how a draft among them played out.

Whether you're playing in redraft or dynasty, DFS or IDP, this magazine has all the information you need to make your league-mates cry in 2016.

Including, of course, the obligatory cheatsheets of all shapes and sizes, including an aggregate one contributed to by a dirty dozen of fantasy football big shots.

You know, come to think of it, given the edge all this information gives you, the power you can gain in your league from this knowledge, maybe you are cheating just a little.

Hey – it works for Tom Brady.

The Scoring System

While evaluating players, our panel of fantasy experts used the following scoring system as a "baseline" for player comparisons. If your league's scoring differs considerably, then you should bear that in mind while viewing the rankings.

Offensive Scoring

Each Passing TD ..... 4 points
Each Rushing TD ..... 6 points
Each Receiving TD ..... 6 points
Each 20 yards passing .....1 point
Each 10 yards rushing .....1 point
Each 10 yards receiving .....1 point
Each reception ..... 1 point
2-point conversion ..... 2 points

QuarterBacks

At 37 years of age, New Orleans Saints quarterback Drew Brees is much closer to the end of his career than the beginning. And after Brees struggled with injuries and posted his lowest yardage and touchdown totals since 2010 his ADP in early fantasy drafts (per Fantasy Football Calculator) has slipped to seventh at his position. Sportswriters such as USA Today's Steven Ruiz are speculating 2016 could be it for the future Hall-of-Famer in the Big Easy. "New Orleans could start its rebuild from the ground up," Ruiz wrote. "And Brees could go to a better team that is just a quarterback away from contender."

Well, if this is Brees' swan song season with the Saints, Chad Stapley of Football Diehards is buying a front-row seat. He ranked Brees as the top overall option at the position in 2016, which would a Newton-esque fantasy coup given the old man's asking price.

Given the loss of Calvin Johnson and the short-passing scheme of OC Jim Bob Cooter (no, really. …swear to God that's his name), many fantasy pundits are down on Matthew Stafford of the Detroit Lions in 2016 despite his hot second-half last season, However, Cooter insisted to the Detroit Free Press that the Lions weren't going to schematically neuter their signal-caller. "I don't think we'll put any restraints on our quarterback," he said.

Lisa Ann of Football Diehards is on board the Motown Express. She was the only ranker who slotted Stafford inside the top 10 – six spots higher than any other panelist and 11 slots higher than his QB20 ADP.

RunningBacks

Latavius Murray of the Oakland Raiders made the Pro Bowl last year, but he told ESPN he's only just getting started. "Going into my fourth season, coming off of last year where I was a full-time starter, I'm definitely more confident," he said. "I still have a lot to prove and a lot that I want to improve on as far as my game. Looking forward to it." Still, the addition of rookie DeAndre Washington has some fantasy drafters leery on investing heavily in Murray, whose ADP sits at RB17 according to Fantasy Pros.

At that asking price you can bet that Stapley and high-stakes vet Kimra Schleicher will be big buyers on Murray in 2016. Both have him ranked inside their top 10.

New Cleveland Browns head coach Hue Jackson created a two-headed backfield of fantasy-relevant players in Cincinnati, and Browns tailback Duke Johnson told the team's website he's excited about his role in 2016. Just seeing the way he has used (running backs) in the past and splitting them out wide and getting the best out of them and using their strengths in every way he can." Johnson said. "I'm excited to see it. We're off to a good start already, but I'm just happy to see how far and how in depth we go with the offense."

High-stakes maven Brad Kruse is apparently feeling that excitement also – but not to the extent of Mike Dempsey of Sirius XM Fantasy Sports Radio. While the duo both ranked Johnson as a top-20 back, Dempsey's ranking of 15 is the high-water mark among our experts, and significantly higher than Johnson's RB26 ADP in PPR formats.

WideReceiver

There are certain constants in life. Death. Taxes. Politicians playing fast and loose with the truth. And in recent years Demaryius Thomas of the Denver Broncos posting WR1 fantasy numbers. However, in 2016 it appears our experts think that run is going to dry up. Only one ranker (FanDuel's Brandon Gdula) slotted Thomas in the top 10. Nearly half the panel placed the 28-year-old outside the top 15.

However, it's worth noting that even with the slipshod quarterback play of Brock Osweiler and Peyton Manning's corpse last year, Thomas still managed a WR9 finish in leagues that award a point for receptions. Is Mark Sanchez really any worse? If you don't think so Thomas has the makings of a value play in 2016.

Sure, he's on the mend after having a screw inserted into his balky foot this offseason. And sure, he may be without his starting quarterback for the first month of the 2016 season. But if his ADP of WR15 in PPR leagues at Fantasy Pros is any indication, drafters aren't all that leery of selecting Julian Edelman of the New England Patriots as a high-end WR2.

If the views of the consensus of our experts are any indication, that may be a mistake. Only two rankers (Dempsey and Bleacher Report's Gary Davenport) have Edelman ranked inside the top 15. Conversely five have him outside the top 20, and one (Kruse) has Edelman slotted in WR3 territory.

TightEnd

Cincinnati Bengals quarterback Andy Dalton opened OTAs (per USA Today) talking up tight end Tyler Eifert. "For a guy to be as big as he is, to run the routes the way he does, to go up and make plays – he's a special talent," Andy Dalton said. The problem, of course, is that Eifert recently had surgery to repair the ankle injury he suffered in the 2015 Pro Bowl – an injury that puts his availability for Week 1 in doubt.

That doubt is evidenced in the variance among our experts where Eifert's 2016 prospects are concerned. Stapley remains bullish on Eifert, with only Rob Gronkowski of the Patriots ahead of him at the position. Five rankers slotted inside the top 5. At the other end of that spectrum we have Lisa Ann – and when we say at the other end we mean it. She has Eifert outside the top 25 altogether – effectively undraftable.

Looking for some late value at the tight end spot? Well, if you want to wait a long time to draft a starter at the position in 2016, Matt Harmon of NFL.com recommends going the long in the tooth route with Jason Witten of the Dallas Cowboys.

Witten told the Dallas Morning News he's convinced he can still play at the highest of levels. "Right now," he said, "I feel I can continue to try to do that and that's what makes it so much more fun for me." Witten was the lowest-ranked player at his position on our board to receive a single-digit vote from an expert. That vote was from Harmon, who ranked Witten ninth.

DRAFT COMMENTARY 2016

Each year, fantasy owners spend the early part of the summer months preparing for their drafts. They examine cheatsheets. Study up on sleepers and busts. Look at average draft position data. Take part in any number of "practice run" mock drafts to get a feel for where players are being taken.

Hey, you gotta have something to do while you're waiting for the burgers to get done at the family barbecue.

Well, here at Cheatsheets we did some cooking of our own. We've assembled a group of 12 leading industry experts, and asked them to draft a fantasy squad with a starting lineup of 1 QB, 2 RB, 3 WR, 1 TE, 1 K, 1 D/ST, and a "flex" spot for a PPR (point per reception) scoring system. 18 total rounds. In other words, a fairly straightforward PPR draft.

Granted, just because this draft unfolded the way it did doesn't mean yours will as well, but that doesn't mean we can't gain some valuable insight from how things played out here.

QUARTERBACKS

Grain of salt time. In so-called "experts" drafts quarterbacks generally go a bit later, so it's entirely possible that Cam Newton will come off the board in your draft earlier than pick 34. However, follow the lead of the people who do this for a living -- wait. There's more depth at quarterback than at any of the other offensive positions.

Best Value: Ben Roethlisberger, Pittsburgh Steelers (7.06)

Big Ben is the poster boy for the payday associated with waiting under center. With arguably both the NFL's best running back and best wide receiver at his disposal, Roethlisberger has elite fantasy upside, but he came off the board over three full rounds after the first player at the position was drafted.

Best Value, Part 2: Philip Rivers, San Diego Chargers (13.05)

Sure, Rivers didn't have an especially great season in 2015 from a fantasy standpoint. But he'll get top wideout Keenan Allen back, added a new deep threat in free agent acquisition Travis Benjamin, and attempted more passes than any quarterback in the NFL a year ago.

RUNNING BACKS

The times they are a-changing in fantasy football. Where running backs once dominated the beginning of drafts, not a single ball-carrier was taken in the top 5 here. Of course, six backs in a row came off the board staring at 1.06, but still. …

Best Value: Matt Forte, N.Y. Jets (5.03)

Forte told NJ.com he's "looking forward to getting back into having a fullback, a lead blocker, a power-type running game," with his new team. Yes he isn't getting any younger, but in a format that awards a point for catches he's highway robbery in Round 5.

Biggest Reach: Devonta Freeman, Atlanta Falcons (1.11)

Calling fantasy football's top running back in 2015 a "reach" may raise some eyebrows. But Freeman faded down the stretch last year, ranking 23rd among running backs from Week 10 on. The return of Tevin Coleman could also cost Freeman some touches.

WIDE RECEIVERS

The wideouts have the claimed the mantle of the kings of fantasy mountain in the majority of drafts in 2016. In this draft it was Odell Beckham of the Giants who went first overall, but Julio Jones (Falcons) and Antonio Brown (Steelers) are also strong considerations for the No. 1 spot.

Best Value: Larry Fitzgerald, Arizona Cardinals (6.05)

Fitzgerald may be much closer to the end of his career than the beginning, but in 2015 he was a top-10 fantasy option at the position in this format on the heels of a career-high 109 catches. Another 100-catch season wouldn't be a shock.

Biggest Reach: Odell Beckham, New York Giants (1.01)

Don't get me wrong, Beckham's a transcendent talent and a legitimate top-5 pick. The problem here is simply that he isn't Antonio Brown, who is the most "bust-proof" of the elite wide receivers. Brown was fantasy's top WR in 2015 despite not having Roethlisberger for a chunk of the season.

TIGHT ENDS

The tight end position may be the trickiest spot of all for fantasy owners in 2016. There's a no-brainer No. 1 (Rob Gronkowski of the Patriots), a couple more strong weekly starts (Greg Olsen of the Panthers and Washington's Jordan Reed) and then a whole bunch of question marks.

Best Value: Rob Gronkowski, New England Patriots (2.05)

There isn't a position in fantasy football where the gap between No. 1 and No. 2 sniffs the chasm that exists between Gronk and the next-best tight end. There's a very strong argument for taking Gronkowski in the first round, and getting him in Round 2 is a coup, regardless of scoring system.

Best Value, Part 2: Delanie Walker, Tennessee Titans (7.05)

Frankly, there wasn't a pick at the tight end slot in this entire draft that was a poor value. That most especially includes getting Walker, who topped 1,000 yards and should serve as the No. 1 option in the Titans' passing game again in 2016, midway through Round 7.

KICKER / DEFENSE

Best Value: Philadelphia Eagles defense (18.12)

The "Mr. Irrelevant" of this draft is anything but -- the Eagles were a top-5 fantasy defense last year in many scoring systems, and they open the 2016 season with a pair of juicy matchups.

Biggest Reach: Stephen Gostkowski, New England Patriots (13.11)

This really isn't terrible value, but Gostkowski was the first kicker drafted, and therefore criticism of the selection is mandatory. Hey, I don't make da rules.

1	Odell Beckham (WR) He's a consensus top-5 player this year. In his short 27 game career, he's averaged 22.8 ppg. Another year with Bob McAdoo should only help the continued development of this dynamic young player.	Antonio Brown (WR) Brown's pace working with Big Ben last season extrapolates to 153 receptions, 2022 yards and 14 touchdowns. Otherwise known as what would have been the greatest fantasy campaign of all time.	Julio Jones (WR) At pick three, I was fine taking Antonio Brown, Odell Beckham, or Jones, so this pick was made for me. The only thing that can slow him down is injury.	A.J. Green (WR) Green at 1.04 might seem aggressive but he could easily top 170 targets this season. He will be a top-5 receiver and offers more clarity than the backs here.	Dez Bryant (WR) I knew I was going A.J. Green or Dez Bryant here. In a PPR league I want a dominant WR1 as my first pick, especially a WR1 without a stellar WR2 on his team.	Le'Veon Bell (RB) When the draft started with five straight WRs, Bell was an easy pick. He is the clear-cut No. 1 RB in PPR formats. …provided he is healthy. DeAngelo Williams is a must-have for Bell owners.
2	Brandon Marshall (WR) Assuming Ryan Fitzpatrick returns, a new RB and a quality WR2 working alongside him should allow Marshall to continue performing as a fringe WR1 in fantasy.	Amari Cooper (WR) This can read as a reach, but I'm clearly all in for Year 2 for a PPR maven well beyond his years in regards to producing a robust and rewarding route tree.	Jordy Nelson (WR) I'm actually afraid of trusting Nelson, but the chance at Jones and Nelson's combined upside was too intriguing to pass up. This team could have two top-5 receivers from the start.	Demaryius Thomas (WR) Thomas was the WR11 in PPR last year with poor quarterback play. He'll push for 30 percent of Denver's targets again and offer a fine floor.	Keenan Allen (WR) Allen was on pace to finish as the WR4 in 2015. His internal injuries do not worry me and I expect Philip Rivers to lock in on him again in 2016.	Mike Evans (WR) Evans will be Jameis Winston's go-to guy in an up and coming offense and a return to double digit TDs is in order.
3	Jarvis Landry (WR) The WR trend continues for me as I grabbed Landry who has been dominant in PPR leagues. Another 100-plus reception season should cement him as a difference-making WR3 on my team.	Sammy Watkins (WR) Simply put -- Watkins is a steal here in PPR. The Clemson star was already ninth at WR in FP/G in 2015 and led the position in FP/G on passes of 10+ yards.	T.Y. Hilton (WR) Hilton, another bounce-back candidate given Andrew Luck's return, was my favorite player available here. With the ability to play four receivers in a PPR set-up, I'm more than fine with a receiver-heavy start.	Mark Ingram (RB) Ingram had eight RB1 weeks in PPR, despite playing just 12 games last season. The Saints' offense could be even better in 2016.	Eddie Lacy (RB) I would have preferred another receiver here, but I felt Lacy fell to me in the third. He is a major bounce-back candidate with both Nelson and Cobb returning to full health.	Julian Edelman (WR) Just a pass catching machine. Even if Tom Brady misses four games and the Patriots run a bunch of two-TE sets, Edelman will catch 90+ passes.
4	Jordan Matthews (WR) Strong second half of the 2015 season followed up a strong second half of the 2014 season. I expect his off-season work with Eagles QBs will lead to continued improvement in Matthews' game.	Ryan Mathews (RB) In a marketplace defined by leveraging risk for reward, I would have liked to land Smallwood, too, but Mathews ranked in the top 10 in yards before and after contact per rush in 2015.	Golden Tate (WR) Tate should flirt with 100 catches after snagging 99 and 90, respectively, in his first two seasons with Detroit. He was terribly inefficient in 2015, but the volume is exciting for a PPR flex.	Dion Lewis (RB) I'm betting on the Dion Lewis of 2015 returning to full-form here. He was on pace for 100 targets before going down with injury.	Greg Olsen (TE) He is the Carolina Panthers' WR1 with a TE tag. Olsen has 255 total targets, 40 red-zone targets and 11 red-zone scores in his past two seasons.	Eric Decker (WR) I would have taken Doug Baldwin, but he went one pick before mine. Assuming Ryan Fitzpatrick and the Jets work things out, Decker will make a solid WR3.
5	Duke Johnson (RB) He'll likely share backfield duties with Isaiah Crowell but will be the pass catcher of the duo and could be the main man in Cleveland. I like his upside with Hue Jackson in charge.	Thomas Rawls (RB) We'll find Rawls sliding in PPR formats, which makes sense, but there is still an appropriate price and window for profit for his rare big-play ability.	Matt Forte (RB) Even Forte's career-low 44 grabs in 2015 go a long way in PPR. Bilal Powell will eat into that workload, but Forte's advanced metrics on the ground have skyrocketed in the past two seasons, too.	John Brown (WR) Brown could finish as the top receiver in Arizona this season, and offers weekly "finishing move" upside as a WR3 behind two target hogs for this team.	Latavius Murray (RB) Murray was one of seven running backs to crack 1,000 yards in 2015. The Raiders did next to nothing to add to the run game aside from beefing up their offensive line.	Travis Kelce (TE) Kelce was my top-rated TE left, and I felt the RB and WR talent was pretty flat, and that I could wait and get a second RB comparable to what is available here.
6	Javorius Allen (RB) Allen is looking to build on his strong rookie campaign; this backfield is muddled, but I'll try to piece multiple shares of it together hopefully hitting on a fantasy gem in a Marc Trestman offense.	Ameer Abdullah (RB) Last year's late-summer hype commodity, Double A will charge your roster with quality flex appeal thanks to a diverse skill set and an offense set on becoming more balanced.	Giovani Bernard (RB) Bernard is a perfect RB2 target after this start. Few backs have his receiving upside and talent, as evidenced by both raw stats (148 catches in 45 career games) and advanced analytics.	Donte Moncrief (WR) Moncrief already started his breakout last year and was on pace for 76-870-11 in the first seven games of the year. He will get to finish it this year.	Michael Crabtree (WR) Crabtree out-targeted and outscored Amari Cooper last year yet I was able to draft him exactly 45 picks later. He is an underrated WR2 with WR1 upside.	DeMarco Murray (RB) If the Titans don't draft Derrick Henry, Murray might have gone in Round 2. Tennessee is talking up using Murray as a workhorse. Worth the risk in Round 6.
7	Dwayne Allen (TE) Allen just received a new contract, and the Colts let Coby Fleener go off to New Orleans. If Luck stays healthy, Allen should be very productive in this Rob Chudzinski led offense.	Jeremy Langford (RB) While rushing efficiency may escape his profile, Langford's healthy stock in PPR formats -- especially given his pedigree as a college receiver -- remains intriguing for those going heavy on elite wideouts.	Frank Gore (RB) Gore's weekly upside was capped last year behind Matt Hasselbeck. If Indy's offense returns to form under Andrew Luck, he'll have access to red-zone touches and goal-line scores, making him a fine RB3.	Torrey Smith (WR) Say what you will about Chip Kelly, but he undeniably boosts the play volume of his offense. Smith will be the biggest beneficiary and could top 140 targets in a top-30 WR season.	Delanie Walker (TE) I rarely carry two tight ends but the same logic with Olsen applies here. Walker is the WR1 on his team, and I could certainly do worse than flexing Walker on a weekly basis.	Ben Roethlisberger (QB) I expect Pittsburgh's offense to be among the best in the league and, with Le'Veon Bell already in the fold, I will have a piece of every TD the Steelers score.
8	Derek Carr (QB) This could be a breakout year for Carr as he looks to build on another year together with standout WRs Amari Cooper and Michael Crabtree along with a good young TE in Clive Walford.	Kenneth Dixon (RB) I'm a huge Dixon fan given his elite playmaking ability and Marc Trestman's penchant for getting his backs in space, where this rookie can do major damage en route to securing meaningful opportunities.	Willie Snead (WR) Snead was average at best by advanced metrics in 2015, but Drew Brees can make anyone a fantasy asset. At worst, Snead will be the third option in an always-prolific offense.	Gary Barnidge (TE) The tight end landscape gets incredibly murky after Barnidge. Surrounded by a ton of rookie receivers, Barnidge should top 115 targets once again.	Charles Sims (RB) I would take Sims here every time in PPR scoring. He was second on his team in total targets last year and boasted a 72 percent reception rate.	Tyler Lockett (WR) Thought about Lockett and Allen Hurns one round ago. Happy to wait and still get one of them. Could be Seattle's top WR this year and a great WR4 for my team.
9	Kamar Aiken (WR) He's a possession receiver, but could find a place in the lineup. 37-year- old Steve Smith is likely the person standing in his way. But Aiken will battle for more time in training camp.	C.J. Prosise (RB) Consolidating Seattle's backfield wasn't too expensive given their propensity to run and Russell Wilson's invaluable ability to lighten base defenses in the box given his elite rushing angles. Insurance remains important at this position.	Travis Benjamin (WR) Slotting Benjamin into the lineup in hopes of a big play or two each week is much easier to stomach now that he's out of Cleveland. His efficiency can only go up in San Diego.	Karlos Williams (RB) After hammering the receiver position in a start-three league, the rest of my backs will be about swinging for the fences. We saw Williams' potential if McCoy gets hurt again.	Markus Wheaton (WR) Wheaton is another receiver I am surprised fell. Martavis Bryant is leaving 92 targets on the table this year. If Wheaton even sees a quarter of them he will build on his productive 2015 season.	Tavon Austin (WR) Probably my favorite pick. Do I think he will catch 100 passes as Jeff Fisher suggested? No, but he is vastly underrated for a guy coming off a 10 TD season.
10	Isaiah Crowell (RB) Will share backfield duties with Johnson. Will provide valuable fantasy bench strength if he becomes the hot back in Cleveland and will serve as my handcuff to Johnson.	Michael Thomas (WR) Baby Colston can thrive immediately in a system ideal for his skill set, size and catch radius. Thomas can assume a valuable market share quickly with Drew Brees loving size in the red zone.	Melvin Gordon (RB) The Chargers' offensive line has to stay healthier than it did in 2015. Sure, Danny Woodhead will steal red-zone touches, but the 10th round is too late for Gordon.	LeGarrette Blount (RB) New England did not add any competition for Blount's power-back role. He'll be frustrating, but in potential blowouts, you can roll those dice.	Bilal Powell (RB) His second-half surge came at a time while Chris Ivory was healthy and on the field. He has a defined role in the Jets' offense, and that role is catching the ball.	DeAngelo Williams (RB) I was wondering if I waited too long, but I got my man. As a true handcuff to Bell, I feel I have locked up a top-5 RB in my lineup each week.
11	Justin Forsett (RB) He'll share time with Allen or could be the starter; he links up well with Allen if they can hold off promising rookie Kenneth Dixon or Trent Richardson's latest comeback attempt.	Devontae Booker (RB) Ever notice how C.J. Anderson gets gassed on 15-yard runs? Or how Denver matched Miami's offer only after losing out on their QB in free agency? I'll take contrarian shares of Booker all summer.	Zach Ertz (TE) Ertz' usage keeps trending up, but his efficiency stays nightmarishly worrisome. Still, not many tight ends have 100-target upside (112 last season). That'll pay the bills in PPR -- even if it's ugly.	Shane Vereen (RB) Vereen's 59 catches could go up this year and he was an RB3 in PPR last year regardless. He offers value to a shaky fantasy backfield as a floor play.	Arian Foster (RB) This late in the draft I start throwing darts, and this is a dart with immense upside. When Foster lands somewhere he will be an immediate contributor.	Derrick Henry (RB) I wasn't planning on cornering the Titans' RB market, but Henry makes sense to me given the board and the presence of Murray on my roster.
12	Charles Clay (TE) If this is the year that Clay stays healthy, he will be a great value in Round 13. He's an athletic TE on a team looking for receiving options after Sammy Watkins.	Josh Doctson (WR) Another catch-radius gem, Doctson is my favorite wideout of the 2016 class, and comes at a discount. Smallish outside weapons with long injury histories in DC will eventually give way to this downfield, jump-ball stud.	Jerick McKinnon (RB) McKinnon's role improved late last season. The staff seems ready to involve him more, so it's worth a shot to see if he can become a needed receiver out of the backfield for this offense.	Wendell Smallwood (RB) Even if you don't buy the deafening buzz on Smallwood out of Eagles' camp, he's still the clearest backup behind an oft-injured starter.	Pierre Garcon (WR) Jordan Reed led the Redskins with 116 targets last year. Garcon was behind him with 115. Teams will game plan for Reed this year which could present more opportunity for Garcon.	Jordan Howard (RB) I am in full RB-dart-throwing mode here, and Howard is simply a lottery ticket that could pay off big given John Fox's desire to run the ball.
13	Danny Amendola (WR) A piece of the NE offense can be valuable. Beyond Gronk and Edelman, Amendola will fight for the role of No. 3 target, but he'll be rounding into form as Brady returns to the lineup	Josh Gordon (WR) This was purely a gamble executed in early June, when there is little concrete news regarding Gordon. I was still able to pair a nice tandem of veteran QBs despite taking such obvious risks.	Tyler Boyd (WR) Boyd's upside seems limited, but if the Cincinnati offense keeps clicking in 2016, he could wind up a useful option by default. After all, they did spend second-round draft capital on him.	Kirk Cousins (QB) I'm starting to buy into Kirk Cousins despite his fantasy numbers benefitting from a perfect storm late last year. Washington is just stocked with passing weapons and has questions at running back.	Philip Rivers (QB) I always pair a stud receiver with his quarterback. With the choice between Rivers and Romo here I went with Rivers, as the Chargers should be less run heavy than the Cowboys.	C.J. Spiller (RB) I considered Blake Bortles, but I have a great starter, and QBs are always available on the wire. Spiller in Round 13 offers some upside with little investment.
14	Antonio Andrews (RB) Showed strength in limited action last year. I doubt Derrick Henry plays a role in the pass catching department. Allen could be a surprise if Murray continues his downward spiral.	Eric Ebron (TE) The idea of Ebron getting more reps based on his draft stock could prove foolish, but I'm fine waiting at TE and taking on his rare size-speed combo for an offense looking to cover Megatron's absence.	Tony Romo (QB) Romo is always fun against the Giants, his Week 1 opponent. I've got no problems cutting him before he gets Washington's potentially scary secondary in Week 2 and playing a waiver wire quarterback.	Spencer Ware (RB) Ware averaged 17.7 standard points in three games he saw double-digit carries. He can play and has savior potential for zero-RB drafters if Jamaal Charles starts slow.	Robert Woods (WR) Woods is another target hog who averages seven per game over his career in Buffalo. I believe Year 2 with Tyrod Taylor will result in Woods' breakout year.	Chris Johnson (RB) He DID start over David Johnson last year until he got injured. Not expecting that again but, if DJ gets hurt, CJ steps into a great offense.

Todd Gurley (RB) In hindsight I probably should have drafted DeAndre Hopkins here, but Osweiler scares me, the run drained the first-round WR talent, so I found myself scouting huge upside at a different position.	Ezekiel Elliott (RB) Drafting a rookie in the first round carries plenty of risk. But Elliott may be the best RB talent to enter the NFL since AD, and he's doing it behind the league's best OL.	David Johnson (RB) David Johnson is one of the few RBs who can exceed 300 points with his ability to catch the ball out of the backfield. He will be my anchor RB. Expect a great season!	Adrian Peterson (RB) In 2015 Peterson was the second-best RB in fantasy football with 1,485 yards and 11 TDs. If age is just a number, don't let that number distract me from those numbers.	Devonta Freeman (RB) Freeman had 14 total TDs in his first season as the featured RB for the Falcons. A threat to score whether he is running the ball or acting as a receiver.	DeAndre Hopkins (WR) Hopkins averaged 11.7 targets per game last season, catching 59.4 percent of them for over 1,500 yards while playing with four different QBs. Can Osweiler establish Hopkin's elite status? I think so.	1
Jamaal Charles (RB) My first-round logic strikes again! Hoping Allen Robinson or Brandin Cooks fall to me, they don't, so I draft a superstar who is PPR gold. If healthy, Charles gives me an insane backfield.	Rob Gronkowski (TE) I didn't get the chance to say this much in this draft, but I'm very happy with this pick. Huge edge at the position if Gronk stays healthy, with or without Brady.	Brandin Cooks (WR) Several great players available here. Cooks finished 2015 with 84 receptions, 1,138 yards and nine TDs. With the addition of Michael Thomas and Coby Fleener, expect Cooks to increase his numbers in 2016.	Allen Robinson (WR) Robinson led the NFL with 31 catches of 20 yards or more and played in his first Pro Bowl. This kid is just warming up.	Lamar Miller (RB) Miller truly had been a No. 1 RB his entire career, Miami just never utilized him. Over the last two seasons he averaged 4.8 YPC and had eight TDs, something Houston needs badly.	Alshon Jeffery (WR) Although he struggled to remain healthy, there's no questioning what happens when he's playing. Over his last 16 games, Jeffery has 95 catches, 1,314 yards and 11 touchdowns. Worth the perceived risk here.	2
Jordan Reed (TE) We start three WRs, so far I have none, but I just don't love what's there in Round 3. I'd rather have a player who dominates than chase a position that has been picked over.	Doug Martin (RB) If I get the bowling ball of a back Martin was in 2012 and 2015, this was a solid pick. If I get the injury-marred marshmallow from 2013 and 2014? Well, not so much.	Kelvin Benjamin (WR) Kelvin Benjamin is returning from a torn ACL in 2015. Benjamin had 73 receptions for 1,008 yards in his rookie season. With an improved Cam Newton, Benjamin should see plenty of targets in 2016.	Cam Newton (QB) When Cam falls to you in Round 3, you should forget the rules of when to draft a QB. You aren't just getting a QB, you're getting a RB and a ton of fantasy points.	Jeremy Maclin (WR) Maclin is coming off back to back 1,000-plus yard seasons. Last year was his first year in KC so he should improve on his numbers from last year.	LeSean McCoy (RB) Limited to 12 games last year because of injury, McCoy finished with 895 yards rushing, and Buffalo's offense jumped from 25th to first in total rushing yards. If healthy, he'll be as busy as anybody.	3
Doug Baldwin (WR) Hey, at long last a WR! Baldwin is the clear No. 1 in Seattle, Russell Wilson is ascending as a passer, I look for him to build on an outstanding 2015 and bail me out.	Russell Wilson (QB) Was really hoping to get Randall Cobb here but was sniped. Rather than "settle" I went for the edge under center with a dual-threat every-week starter under center.	Randall Cobb (RB) The offense should be back to normal this season with the healthy return of Jordy Nelson. I expect Cobb to bounce back in 2016 and was thrilled to get him here in the fourth round.	C.J. Anderson (RB) This pick makes me uneasy, the opportunity is there, but there's ample uncertainty in Denver with the QB situation, so though I cringed as I hit the draft button, it makes sense.	Aaron Rodgers (QB) Rodgers is coming off a season where he threw for 31 TDs, without having his No. 1 WR. Most QBs would have a major down year without their top target.	Carlos Hyde (RB) Hyde is determined to show he can be the sturdy, productive rusher who racked up 168 yards and two touchdowns in last season's opener. Chip Kelly will give him every opportunity to do that.	4
Matt Jones (RB) Again, I go for a player poised for a huge season, and who can catch the ball as well. I am prepared to play my hunches on the remaining WRs and grab some sleepers.	Jay Ajayi (RB) Yes, it's the fifth round, and I still haven't drafted a wide receiver. Don't judge me. The stars have aligned for a breakout second season from Ajayi -- if he holds up his end.	Kevin White (WR) Kevin White is returning from a stress fracture in his shin. He will be playing opposite of Alshon Jeffery, and I expect him to see plenty of targets in this offense. Strong WR breakout candidate.	DeSean Jackson (WR) His relationship with Kirk Cousins means more to me than the fact that Jackson likes to stay in LA more than go to OTAs. He is a star, he knows it and so do we.	Jonathan Stewart (RB) Stewart was on the verge of 1,000+ yards both of the last two seasons until injuries held him to 13 games each season. Stewart, when healthy, is one of the league's better RBs.	Danny Woodhead (RB) Even if Melvin Gordon shows up, Woodhead's role has been plenty consistent -- especially as a receiver. It's hard to find a better value play at the position in PPR formats.	5
Andrew Luck (QB) I want a great QB, and Luck is my comeback player of the year. A number of WRs remain who are going to play better than their ADP at this point of any draft.	Larry Fitzgerald (WR) Given how long I waited to draft a wide receiver it's hard not to like Fitz here. He was the No. 6 fantasy WR in PPR last year with a career high 109 catches.	Drew Brees (QB) I normally don't take a QB this early. However, it is hard to pass up Brees when he is averaging over 4,800 passing yards and 38 TDs in the past five years. Very durable QB.	Emmanuel Sanders (WR) Again, the QB situation in Denver plays a role, but in this case, Sanders can make plays for any QB. His draft stock has dropped by situation, but that doesn't change the player he is.	Tom Brady (QB) Brady might miss the start of the season, but he's worth keeping on the bench. He has thrown for an average over 4,600 yards and 33 TDs over the last five seasons.	Michael Floyd (WR) Floyd overcame injury and a slow start to finish with 36 catches, 636 yards, four TDs over the final eight games. He builds on that playing in one of the league's most potent passing attacks.	6
Allen Hurns (WR) Boom! The day after I made this pick, the Jags rewarded Hurns with a big deal, which speaks of bigger things to come. Finally, a WR I love falls to me at the right spot.	Jeremy Hill (RB) Sniped again one pick shy of my turn, this time for Jacksonville wideout Allen Hurns. And once again, rather than settling for fear of a hole at receiver I went the BPA route with Hill.	Chris Ivory (RB) I expect Ivory to handle the bulk of the early carries, and he is a very durable RB. I expect him to average 12-15 touches per game. Will be in a timeshare with T.J. Yeldon.	Sterling Shepard (WR) This kid has rookie swagger written all over him. He has a similar style to Odell and will be sharing the work. One hand catches no problem, looking stellar in OTAs.	Tyler Eifert (TE) Eifert proved to be a monster in the red zone last season. Eifert caught 13 TDs on just 52 receptions, which means he is catching a TD on one out of every four passes.	Carson Palmer (QB) Palmer has become an extension of Bruce Arians. With a strong supporting cast, there's no reason to believe Palmer won't continue playing at a very high level again in 2016.	7
Marvin Jones (WR) Say hello to another WR I think gets a big boost in 2016. Sure, I'm chasing the position, but Jim Bob Cooter had the Lions' offense humming, and Stafford needs someone to replace Megatron.	DeVante Parker (WR) So about that hole at wide receiver. If Parker's talent level and stretch-run production last year are any indication, I could do worse as my WR2 all things considered.	T.J. Yeldon (RB) Easy pick here. I was able to corner the Jaguar backfield by selecting Yeldon. I expect him to be the primary third down RB. Yeldon is more valuable in PPR leagues.	Coby Fleener (TE) Fleener's new home made me change my mindset of looking at him as a DFS play only, to now, wanting him in a season-long league. This is a great fit all the way around.	Corey Coleman (WR) RGIII is going to need someone to throw the ball to. With the unknown status of Josh Gordon, Coleman enters the season as the presumptive No. 1 WR for the Browns.	Theo Riddick (RB) Riddick led the NFL's running backs in catches last season. He was second in receiving yards. That role isn't going to change, and fantasy owners in PPR leagues will continue to benefit from Riddick's rise.	8
Breshad Perriman (WR) Again, this is a pure premise pick -- we have reason to believe this could be the guy in Baltimore, he's got a good QB, so let's roll the dice in Round 9.	Rashad Jennings (RB) Had my eyes on a pair of WR here (Travis Benjamin of the Chargers and Tavon Austin of the Rams). Guess what happened? So I took my fifth (and last) RB of the draft.	Tevin Coleman (RB) Tevin Coleman had a disappointing rookie campaign last year. Coleman is expected to be in a RBBC again with Devonta Freeman. Coleman is a legitimate breakout candidate.	Ted Ginn, Jr. (WR) After taking Cam in the third round, I committed in this draft to having a connection possibility on my team to get me a nice boost of weekly fantasy production and points.	Stefon Diggs (WR) Diggs had an impressive rookie campaign. As a fifth-round pick there was no certainty he would even make the roster but he did and quickly became the Vikings' best WR.	Dorial Green-Beckham (WR) Opportunity and upside are worth something. In the case of Green-Beckham, they're worth a ninth-round pick. Yes, he's still raw but size and speed cannot be coached. I'll hope the necessary skills develop.	9
Vincent Jackson (WR) Okay, now I am just throwing WR spaghetti against the wall and hoping some of it sticks. Jackson is capable of great things, his QB is no longer a rookie, so I take a shot.	Laquon Treadwell (WR) At this point I had to face facts -- going to have to hit on a couple upside plays among my receivers. So I rolled the dice on my top rookie receiver of 2016 in Treadwell.	Jason Witten (TE) All of my top-tiered TEs were off the board so I went with Mr. Consistency. He doesn't have a lot of upside but is a prime target for Tony Romo in this offense.	Darren McFadden (RB) Yes, Dallas has a lot of talent, but DMC will be the talent in the end zone. Another player that showed us last season, age is only a number.	Ladarius Green (TE) Heath Miller retired, so the Steelers brought in Green to fill the void. Green has been oozing with potential for four seasons but never got to show it on the field.	Antonio Gates (TE) Last year Gates caught 56 passes for 630 yards and five touchdowns in 11 games. Fellow TE Ladarius Green moved on the Steelers and Gates might have another top-5 season in him.	10
Jimmy Graham (TE) Oh, how the mighty have fallen! This is a classic example of taking a shot on a great player who burned everyone who picked him high last year. Round 11? Why not?	Nelson Agholor (WR) To be blunt, Agholor was a hot mess as a rookie for the Eagles. But I was also able to add Rueben Randle in Round 15 as a late hedge on this WR bet.	Julius Thomas (TE) Thomas suffered a broken hand last season that set him back. With an improved offseason and more chemistry with Blake Bortles, he should see a statistical increase in 2016.	Mohamed Sanu (WR) Sanu has been getting in one on one time with Ryan and is adjusting well with his new home in Atlanta. With Julio Jones demanding coverage, Sanu will be there for the extra looks.	Steve Smith, Sr. (WR) Smith was set to retire after last season, however, an injury brought him back for one more year. Flacco and Smith already have a good relationship, and the Ravens have nothing decent at WR.	Eli Manning (QB) Manning has averaged 4,421 yards, 32.5 touchdown passes, 14 interceptions and completed 62.8 percent of his passes in two years with Ben McAdoo -- well above his career averages. Odell Beckham's presence helps.	11
Chris Hogan (WR) Probably should be looking at RB depth but can't resist my favorite deep-dish sleeper for 2016. The Pats paid him good money, Brady loves slot imps with good hands, could be what Amendola never became.	Kendall Wright (WR) Wright bulked up a bit in the offseason and will kick to the slot in 2016. It's where he belongs -- and with luck the impetus for a rebound season. Fingers crossed.	Marcus Mariota (QB) Great back up QB that should continue to improve with more weapons around him. With the addition of DeMarco Murray and others, Mariota will continue to develop as Tennessee's franchise QB.	Phillip Dorsett (WR) After recovering from surgery he added some size to his upper body. In full health and with Andre Johnson no longer on the roster, Dorsett will be all around their offense.	Paul Perkins (RB) The Giants don't have a solid answer at RB. In fact, Perkins, who can run and catch passes better than any current Giants' RB, might end up being the starter by Week 4.	Zach Miller (TE) Truth be told, I thought I was drafting Zach Ertz. Oh well, plenty of upside as Miller demonstrated last season while scoring a touchdown in half of his last eight games.	12
Blake Bortles (QB) Bortles really delivered last year, I love the kid's upside, and this offense is suddenly stuffed with weapons. This is a great insurance policy should Luck falter along the way.	Devin Funchess (WR) Like I said, the second half of my draft was all about upside dart throws at receiver. Frankly, I feel better about Pittsburgh's Sammie Coates in Round 16 than Funchess here.	Will Fuller (WR) The Texans moved up to select Will Fuller with the No. 21 overall pick in the 2016 NFL draft. Fuller has blazing speed but questionable hands. He is expected to play opposite of DeAndre Hopkins.	Alfred Blue (RB) Blue will be the backup for Miller, but he will also be sharing some work. Injuries happen and for back-up trade bait, I felt he was worth the pick.	Stephen Gostkowski (PK) Gostkowski is the best and most consistent kicker in the NFL. With Brady potentially serving a four game suspension the Patriots may call on Gostkowski to kick more FGs early in the season.	Mike Wallace (WR) Baltimore will give Wallace the most chances to run straight down the field, which is what he does best. Nobody throws deep more often than Joe Flacco. We'll see if Wallace can maximize the opportunity.	13
Terrance Williams (WR) Okay, at least two of my army of late-round WRs have to stand up and shock the world, right? I like the value here enormously, now we need Romo's collarbone to comply.	Denver (DEF) If you're weak at a position, the best thing to do is fortify the others. Did it at QB and TE. And in taking the Broncos D, I did it here. But man those WR.	Arizona (DEF) I wanted a top-5 defense here so it was hard to turn down the Arizona Cardinals' defense. With the addition of Chandler Jones and several defensive draft picks, expect more of the same in 2016.	Charcandrick West (RB) New contracts for West and Ware in the offseason. Leads me to believe there will be some rest and patience in the recovery of Jamaal Charles. West will get some work done.	Seattle (DEF) Seattle had somewhat of a down year last season but should recover and be the Legion of Boom yet again this season. With Richard Sherman in the backfield this defense will always be scary.	Darren Sproles (RB) Sproles became a dangerous weapon in Kelly's offense with his talent as both a running back and as a receiver. The Eagles hope Sproles will continue that in new HC Doug Pederson's offense this season.	14

Sleeper Prediction

Jordan Howard, RB, Chicago Bears

After not offering a contract to Matt Forte, the Bears added Howard in the fifth round of the draft to a crowded backfield that includes 2014 fourth-round pick Jeremy Langford and 2013 fourth-round selection Ka'Deem Carey. Last season Langford rushed for 537 yards and a team-high six touchdowns on 148 carries, while Carey added 159 yards and two TDs on 43 attempts. Meanwhile, the Bears see Howard as a physical north/south runner who can wear down defenses. The 6-foot, 230-pounder looks to be an ideal complement to the fast and elusive Langford. Teams John Fox coached in Carolina and Denver generally employed a backfield-by-committee approach. Asked how the Bears intend to share the workload, OC Dowell Loggains said: "We're going to do what each player does well. Sometimes, maybe the hot hand gets the carries. Sometimes it's 30, sometimes it's 10. It depends. Each game plays out differently." I'm with ESPN's Mike Clay, who predicts Howard will prove to be the Bears' top RB this season with the rookie overtaking "the underwhelming" Langford as the team's featured back. Given Howard's bargain-basement ADP, it's a gamble worth taking.

Value Picks

Mike Wallace, WR, Baltimore Ravens

It's safe to say Wallace wasn't the perfect fit in an Adrian Peterson-centric offense in Minnesota or with Dolphins QB Ryan Tannehill the two seasons before that. As ESPN.com noted, Baltimore will give Wallace the most chances to run straight down the field, which is what he does best. In Joe Flacco's first seven seasons, he threw 108 passes that traveled 40 yards or more in the air. That's 20 more than any other quarterback over that span. Remember, Wallace averaged 19 and 21 yards per catch his first two seasons as a Steeler. He still has that speed. And now he might have the right situation (depending to some degree on where Breshad Perriman's development is coming off the knee injury that sidelined him all of last year)

Sammie Coates, WR, Pittsburgh Steelers

After making minimal impact his rookie year, Coates intensified his training, lost some weight and earned the coaches' trust during the offseason. According to ESPN.com's Jeremy Fowler, the next four months will be big for Coates' development. Where Coates can separate himself is with big plays, which the offense needs without Martavis Bryant, who has been suspended for the 2016 season. Year 2 should show a more polished receiver than last season, when at times Coates looked hesitant and maybe a little lost. Remember; Markus Wheaton is the likely starter with Bryant out and Darrius Heyward-Bey will be asked to contribute. But Coates is a player worth watching.

Chris Hogan, WR, New England Patriots

It seemed like a bit of a surprise when the Patriots tendered an offer sheet for Hogan, a restricted free agent. It was a three-year, $12 million, heavily guaranteed contract the Buffalo Bills chose not to match. Despite catching just 36 balls for 450 yards last season, Hogan – known as "7-Eleven" because, in theory, he's always open – impressed HC Bill Belichick with his football IQ during a visit. In addition, at 6-1 and 220 pounds, Hogan is bigger than both Danny Amendola and Julian Edelman. The trio should give quarterback Tom Brady a reliable collection of receivers to target behind TE Rob Gronkowski. Assuming he opens the season as the starter opposite Edelman (Brandon LaFell's release opened that spot), Hogan will be offered the best opportunity of his career. Just playing in the same offense with Brady (for at least 12 games anyhow) should provide a big boost in production. Hogan could be one of those under the radar players who provide great value in 2016.

Bust Prediction

Devonta Freeman, RB, Atlanta Falcons

Freeman heads into the 2016 season with huge expectations after racking up more than 1,600 yards from scrimmage and scoring 14 touchdowns last season. And huge expectations are always a concern for me. That's especially true in this case, where said huge totals were a product of injuries to Tevin Coleman and the resulting touches Freeman enjoyed. That would be 300-plus combined chances with the football. While there's no questioning Freeman's status as the offense's leading back, Coleman is going to get his turn this season if healthy. Remember, in the two games he started and finished as a rookie, Coleman tallied 38 carries for 190 yards at an average of five yards per carry. Assuming that's the case, Freeman's first-round price tag is more than I'm willing to pay.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise:	Jay Ajayi
Fantasy Flop:	Jeremy Langford
First-Round Bust:	Devonta Freeman
Top Fantasy Rookie:	Ezekiel Elliott
Comeback Player of the Year:	Kelvin Benjamin
Golden Oldie:	Carson Palmer
Must-Have Player:	Tom Brady
Must-Avoid Player:	Andrew Luck

Comeback Player Of The Year

Benjamin was a force his rookie year, catching 73 passes for 1,008 yards and nine touchdowns. But even though they went 15-1 and made it to the Super Bowl without him in 2015, their lack of a guy who could get open and catch it if he did was exposed by the Broncos in that final game. Getting Benjamin back, along with the development of Devin Funchess, gives the Panthers the chance to improve significantly in the passing game. And that's saying something with Cam Newton coming off an MVP season that included 35 TD passes. I expect Benjamin to pick up right where he left off.

KIMRA SCHLEICHER ◆

High-Stakes Player, Fantasy Hall-Of-Famer

I grew up in southern Indiana in a very competitive family. Growing up with three boys and active parents who loved sports just as much as we did helped to fuel the competitive spirit that I have today. I began participating in fantasy football drafts in 2002. Four years ago, I was truly honored and humbled by Toyota to be recognized as one of the four recipients of the inaugural Toyota Fantasy Football Hall of Fame! It was an unbelievable experience, and I am flattered to have been selected!

I enjoy competing in live events, and the first draft I attend is the Kentucky Fantasy Football State Championship (kffsc.com). The draft is held two weeks prior to the Las Vegas high stakes events and is held in the last weekend in August. I enjoy this event because many of the high stakes players from across the country either attend the two day draft or draft teams online. The KFFSC tournament is a great warm-up for the high stakes events in Las Vegas. The high stakes tournaments in Las Vegas I participate in are the following: NFFC, FFPC, and the FFWC.

I enjoy competing in all of the above referenced live events because they each have a very unique lineup and scoring rules. I have been very fortunate to have earned well over $300,000 in my high stakes career. I have won several high stakes leagues in Las Vegas. I finished in the top 10 overall on six separate occasions at various Las Vegas events. I posted two top-10 finishes in 2015 in the NFFC and also in the FFPC. I, along with my good friend Emil Kadlec, finished third overall in the Primetime Championship tournament in the NFFC. I also finished No. 4 overall in the FFPC main event tournament with my good friend Shawn Childs.

Lastly, I have finished in the top 10 on four occasions at the World Championship of Fantasy Football with two top-10 finishes (third and ninth) in 2010. I won the $5K Commander League in 2014 at the FFWC. Along with Childs, I was runner-up in the $25k platinum league in 2008. I won the Kentucky Fantasy Football State Championship (KFFSC) in 2010 and finished as runner-up in 2009. I have also won the King of the Decade contest for the most total points for a season. I have appeared on Sirius Fantasy Sports, ESPN, BFDFantasy, and KFFSC radio shows. Best of luck this year and happy drafting!

Value Plays

Coby Fleener, TE, New Orleans Saints – I selected Fleener as a value play because of his move to the New Orleans Saints. Drew Brees loves throwing to the TE, and with Brandin Cooks, Willie Snead and the newly drafted Michael Thomas, there will be plenty of room for Fleener to excel in New Orleans. Remember what Ben Watson and Jimmy Graham were able to do in this offense in the not so distant past. Fleener was held back in Indianapolis due to the timeshare with Dwayne Allen. Fleener caught at least 50 passes in each of his last three seasons in Indianapolis. I expect him to be a legitimate TE1 in this offense.

Kevin White, WR, Chicago Bears – White was selected by the Chicago Bears with the No. 7 overall pick last year. He is 100 percent healthy after suffering a stress fracture last season and missing his rookie year. I expect White to break out this season opposite of Alshon Jeffery. At 6-3 and 215 pounds, he is fast and physical! He should see plenty of targets this upcoming season.

Sleeper Picks

Kenneth Dixon, RB, Baltimore Ravens – I expect Kenneth Dixon to push Justin Forsett and Javorius Allen for playing time in Baltimore this season. Dixon was dynamic at LA Tech and had over 800 carries for 4480 yards and 72 touchdowns. He also caught 88 passes and had 87 all-purpose TDs. He had an excellent Combine in Indianapolis as well. On draft day, don't sleep on Dixon. He can be drafted in the later rounds and should be a solid value play for your team.

Sterling Shepard, WR, New York Giants – Sterling Shepard was drafted in the second round by the New York Giants. The Giants are limited on offense outside of Odell Beckham Jr. Shepard will have every opportunity to take over the WR2 position in this offense. Although he is small, he has the quickness and explosiveness to excel in this offense. Many expect Victor Cruz to contribute, but no one expects him to return from his 2012 form. Both Cruz and Shepard will be value plays on draft day.

Fantasy Surprise:	Sterling Shepard
Fantasy Flop:	Carlos Hyde
First-Round Bust:	Adrian Peterson
Top Fantasy Rookie:	Corey Coleman
Comeback Player of the Year:	Keenan Allen
Golden Oldie:	Drew Brees
Must Have Player:	Amari Cooper
Must Avoid Player:	Allen Hurns

Golden Oldie

I can't believe I am writing about my favorite NFL player as a Golden Oldie! All Brees has done in the past five seasons is average the following: 5127 yards passing, 10 games with over 300 passing yards, and 38 touchdowns! When other players are reaching for Andrew Luck, Aaron Rodgers and Cam Newton, you can wait and draft a QB like Drew Brees and stockpile other valuable RBs and WR earlier in the draft. Just ask the primetime NFFC champions Mike and Kurt in 2015! They had Brees as their QB and had an incredible run in the championship! Although Brees was injured late in the season, he did not miss a game from weeks 12-16. He is a very durable QB. If you are going to wait on a QB, Drew Brees is your man!

First Round Bust

If you are participating in a PPR league, then Adrian Peterson is my bust candidate. Peterson is 31 years of age now and although he had 1485 yards and 11 TDs last season, he only had 30 receptions. Peterson does not possess the upside of a No. 1 pick. With a No. 1 selection, I am looking for players to score more than 300 points a season. A low reception total combined with the continuing emergence of Jerrick McKinnon qualifies Adrian Peterson as my bust candidate in PPR leagues.

The Cheat Sheet scoring method: 4 pts for passing TDs, 6 pts for rushing TDs, 6 pts for receiving TDs. 1 pt for every 20 yds passing, 1 pt for every 10 yds rushing, 1 point per receptions (PPR), 1 pt for every 10 yds received. Kickers: 3 pts for field goals, 1 pt for extra points.

CHAD STAPLEY ◆ FootballDiehards.com

Stapley has been an avid participant in fantasy football since 2006. However, fantasy football is not his only passion. He follows anything and everything that pertains to the University of Arizona football and basketball (Bear Down) teams. It's understandable; he attended that very institution from 2006-2009 where he studied Sports Journalism. Although he's yet to graduate, he plans to return to obtain his degree in the future. In the meantime he is a realtor in Tucson, Arizona and has been writing a weekly online article for FootballDiehards.com since 2013.

Sleeper

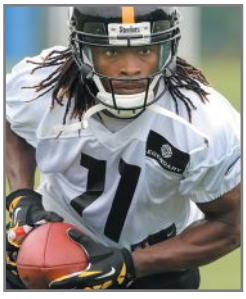
Travis Benjamin – WR – San Diego Chargers

The Chargers needed another WR to complement Keenan Allen in the worst kind of way. So they went out and signed Benjamin who somehow managed to have a career year in 2015 while playing for multiple different QBs in Cleveland. The Chargers are led by steady-handed Philip Rivers who should find instant success with the addition of Benjamin. He is a former Browns WR so there is a good chance you can draft him in the later rounds.

Rishard Matthews – WR – Tennessee Titans

Matthews is coming off his best year in the NFL and going to a team with arguably a better QB in Marcus Mariota. In 2015 Matthews hauled in 43 catches for 662 yards and four TDs on a Miami team where he was the fourth option. Add him to the Titans' roster that has a serious void in talent at the WR department and you could see Matthews flourish with his new team. He also can be acquired late in the draft as a good depth addition if he progresses quickly.

Markus Wheaton – WR – Pittsburgh Steelers



Wheaton is quietly coming off his best season in the NFL, and the Steelers are going to need him to produce even more in the upcoming season. Wheaton caught 44 passes for 749 yards and five TDs in 2015. With the suspension of Martavis Bryant the Steelers will need him to replicate if not improve those stats. Wheaton isn't someone you think of when you think of top-20 caliber WRs, but he could develop into that role if he stays injury-free this season. He can most likely be had near the end of your fantasy football draft.

Coby Fleener – TE – New Orleans Saints

Fleener is jumping ship from the Colts to the Saints where he will be catching passes from Drew Brees. Fleener has had pretty steady production over the last three seasons, averaging 52 catches per year. The Saints have a more high-flying offense, and Brees loves to throw to his TEs, especially when they are athletic like Fleener. His first year with the Saints could be his best season in the NFL yet.

Bust

CJ Anderson – RB – Denver Broncos

Anderson might not even be the best RB on the Broncos' roster with Ronnie Hillman and the newly drafted Devontae Booker waiting behind him to steal carries. Anderson has yet to put up a 1,000 yard season or post double-digit TDs. The Broncos are going to regret signing him to the contract extension and not letting him walk as he really is just a mediocre RB at best.

Mohamed Sanu – WR – Atlanta Falcons

Over the last three seasons Sanu's stats have continued to take a downward spiral. The Falcons signed him to be a No. 2 WR lined up across from Julio Jones, but he couldn't do that effectively in Cincinnati when he was lined up across from AJ Green. Sanu did not catch a TD pass last season, which was his worst season in the NFL. Sanu is due to have another subpar year as he is going to have to learn a new offense and how to play with a new QB.

Mike Wallace – WR – Baltimore Ravens

Wallace is coming off his worst NFL season, playing with the Vikings where he only caught 39 passes and two TDs though he played in 16 games. Wallace is a one trick pony, who uses his speed to beat DBs deep, but he is getting older and his speed is becoming less of a factor each year that passes. He also will be playing with a Joe Flacco who is coming off an injury. Wallace could end up being cut before the season is even over to make room for the younger guys on the roster.

Jared Cook – TE – Green Bay Packers

Cook continues to get FA contracts due to his athletic potential. At what point are teams going to realize that, no matter what, this guy is just a mediocre TE at best? Add that to the fact that incumbent Richard Rodgers is probably already better than him, and he is younger so he will get the nod to start if they come out even after training camp. Cook has games that will make you think this guy could be a star in the NFL, then he will just disappear altogether for a few games at a time.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise: . . . . . .Chris Ivory – RB – New York Jets
Fantasy Flop:. . . . . Jeremy Langford – RB – Chicago Bears
First-Round Bust: . . . . . AJ Green – WR – Cincinnati Bengals
Top Fantasy Rookie:. . . . . Ezekiel Elliott – RB – Dallas Cowboys
Comeback Player of the Year: .Victor Cruz – WR – New York Giants
Golden Oldie:. . . . . Steve Smith Sr. – WR – Baltimore Ravens
Must-Have Player:. . . . . Carlos Hyde – RB – San Francisco 49ers
Must Avoid Player: . . . . . Eddie Lacy – RB – Green Bay Packers

Must Have Player

Hyde is entering Year 3 as the 49ers' RB and his second year as being the No. 1 back. Last year was marred with injuries and coaching changes, but a lot of things have changed in the offseason. Hyde will be healthy and playing for an offensive guru in Chip Kelly who loves to utilize his RBs. Another benefit Hyde has is that the 49ers don't have much in the RB department behind him. If he can stay healthy for a full 16 games you could see Hyde become a top-5 fantasy option.

The Cheat Sheet scoring method: 4 pts for passing TDs, 6 pts for rushing TDs, 6 pts for receiving TDs. 1 pt for every 20 yds passing, 1 pt for every 10 yds rushing, 1 point per receptions (PPR), 1 pt for every 10 yds received. Kickers: 3 pts for field goals, 1 pt for extra points.

BRAD KRUSE ◆ High-Stakes Player

Brad Kruse started playing fantasy football in 2003 and quickly jumped into the high-stakes scene in 2004. Brad has primarily managed high-stakes teams with his brother, Tim. After winning the inaugural 2007 WCOFF Auction Division championship they dubbed themselves "The Fantasy Assassins" in 2008. They celebrated this new identity by winning the inaugural Platinum League Championship at the WCOFF. In 2012 they added the title of Kentucky State Fantasy Football Champion. In 2014, the Assassins had teams finish in fourth and sixth place overall in the FFWC and took home the title for winning the Off the Grid league in the FFPC. In 2016, John Peters joins the Assassins' pre-season preparation team, and he contributed to the mock draft in this magazine. Brad plans on again competing in the KFFSC, the FFWC and the FFPC this summer. Brad considers fantasy football to be a fun hobby that combines his love for sports and probability. Its ever-changing landscape keeps any player from fully mastering the game.

Sleeper

Kenneth Dixon, RB, Baltimore Ravens

Marc Trestman's offense produces significant fantasy value at running back. Running backs in his two years in Chicago were targeted 109 times in 2013 and 136 times in 2014. In 2015, Trestman targeted his running backs 170 times. There is a lot of PPR value in this backfield. Last year, it was split between Buck Allen and Justin Forsett with Kyle Juszczyk also contributing 41 receptions for 321 yards and four TDs. That's a lot of fantasy points for a fullback.

Expect similar production out of Baltimore's backfield again in 2016. The big question is who will deliver – Forsett, Buck Allen, Trent Richardson or Dixon, picked in the fourth round of April's draft. Dixon is a skilled pass catcher and could also be used a short-yardage back due to his vision. Many fantasy analysts thought Dixon was under-drafted. He couldn't have landed in a much better situation given the lack of quality options ahead of him and a fantasy-friendly offense.

Bust

Adrian Peterson, RB, Minnesota Vikings

This was a difficult call for me. There are three or four guys I was considering calling out as my first-round bust. I was worried about some guys due to injury or other off-field distractions. But, with Peterson, as good as he is and as much of a lock for the hall of fame as he is, just doesn't seem to possess the upside of a first-round pick these days. I'm looking for a player with a 300 point or better ceiling. Seven non-quarterbacks met that threshold last year (six wide receivers and one running back.). Peterson has broken that threshold only once since 2010. Only once in those five years has he caught at least 40 passes (40 in 2012). In his last two full seasons, he only managed to catch 30 and 29 passes. He isn't used enough in the passing game to amass the bonus points which can propel someone to a huge fantasy seasons – as it has done with Le'Veon Bell (83 receptions 371 points in 2014), Devonta Freeman (73 receptions 320 points in 2015), Matt Forte (102 receptions and 347 points in 2014) and Jamaal Charles (70 receptions and 382 points in 2013). In PPR leagues, a first-round running back needs to challenge for the league lead in receptions, not rushing yards, to make him worth your while.

Peterson is clearly closer to the end of his career than the beginning. He has amassed 2,381 carries in his career and has turned in six 240-plus point seasons and a seventh netting 238.7 points. The following is a list of fantasy running backs who have had many RB1 seasons and their cumulative rushing attempts in the year going into their first year that they scored fewer than 240 points (minimum points needed to justify even a second-round pick) and didn't return to that level:

Name	Carries prior to sub 240 point season	Qty of 240+ point seasons
Marshall Faulk:	2,367	8
LaDainian Tomlinson:	2,657	8
Shaun Alexander:	1,717	5
Curtis Martin	3,298	7
Priest Holmes	1,419	3
Edgerrin James	2,188	5
Tiki Barber	2,217	7
Maurice Jones Drew	1,484	5

In summary, I think his upside is limited below a first-round pick, and he's crawling dangerously close to the point at which even elite running backs start falling off a cliff.

Value

Ryan Mathews, RB, Philadelphia Eagles

Last year, Mathews was in a crowded backfield yet still managed 107 carries with a 5 yard per carry average. He missed three games due to injury and tied for the team lead with six rushing TDs. DeMarco Murray and his 193 carries have been traded away. Mathews is the likely beneficiary of those touches. Darren Sproles will still be involved, but Mathews' game involvement is bound to increase. The coaching change from Chip Kelly to Doug Pederson (previously with Kansas City) means the team will still employ a system featuring a strong running game. Mathews current ADP is 6.04 (RB26). I like Mathews' chances of being a top-15 running back this year. That's a lot of value in the sixth round of a draft if you start off wide receiver heavy, as so many do these days.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise: . . . . . .Dwayne Allen
Fantasy Flop: . . . . . .Justin Forsett
First Round Bust: . . . . . .Adrian Peterson
Top Fantasy Rookie: . . . . . .Ezekiel Elliott
Comeback Player of the Year: . . . . . Andrew Luck
Golden Oldie: . . . . . Drew Brees
Must Have Player: . . . . . Donte Moncrief
Must Avoid Player: . . . . . LeSean McCoy

Must Avoid Player

McCoy is 28. He had an injury-plagued season last year but still managed a solid 15 ppg. Buffalo will be a run-heavy offense, and McCoy is penciled as the lead back. However, his 4.4 ypc was much worse than Karlos Williams' 5.6 or Mike Gillislee's 5.7. Williams and Gillislee combined for 140 carries in the same backfield. There is a lot of depth in this backfield. McCoy will need to stay healthy and be very productive to keep them off the field. McCoy is currently being drafted as RB13 according to fantasy football calculator, which is borderline RB1 territory.

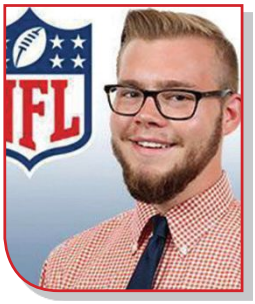
MATT HARMON ◆ NFL.com



I am a writer for NFL.com, Football-guys and the creator of Reception Perception. Most of my work surrounds the study of wide receivers through the lens of the Reception Perception methodology. I believe that wideouts are the new lifeblood of fantasy football, especially with the state of the league as a pass-first, second and third entity. My approach to fantasy football centers on tier-based drafting and constructing potential juggernaut rosters. The best way to accomplish that is by utilizing a wide receiver-heavy draft. Whether you use Upside Down drafting, Zero-RB or some sort of derivative, I believe that brand of roster construction brings about the most powerful fantasy squads. Running backs are important, but they are incredibly fragile entities both in relation to injuries and playing time. They have their place but the disparate nature of the position makes them a tough sell in the early rounds. Much like many in the community, I don't recommend heavy investment in quarterbacks. With the way you can cobble together production from the position, and how reliable options are always ripe for the taking late, I tend to never emphasize them. Tight end is a fluid position every year, other than Rob Gronkowski always being a first two rounds option.

Sleepers

Tyler Lockett, WR, Seattle Seahawks

The diminutive third-round pick caught fire down the stretch, with four games of either 50 yards or a touchdown from Week 10 on. He also posted 75 yards and a score against Carolina in the Seahawks' playoff loss. Lockett combines playmaking speed and detailed route running to boast a threatening skill set. If he secures a starting spot with 100-plus targets in this ascending offense, he could explode.

Willie Snead, WR, New Orleans Saints

Coming off perhaps the quietest 900-plus yard finish for a first season ever, Willie Snead is going completely overlooked. Most are fawning over new addition Michael Thomas and Coby Fleener. Snead is the reliable presence Drew Brees is addicted to, and outplayed Brandin Cooks at times last year. He will provide some flex-worthy weeks and offers more upside if he continues developing as Brees' most trusted route-runner.

Kamar Aiken, WR, Baltimore Ravens

The Baltimore offense is a complete nightmare to project right now. The cupboard is stocked at least four deep at wideout, running back and tight end. However, the only option of the bunch that doesn't come with many questions is Kamar Aiken. The journeyman receiver posted over 900 yards and five touchdowns as the top receiver when Steve Smith went down last season, and it does not look like he's going anywhere soon. The Baltimore Sun's Jeff Zrebiec considers Kamar Aiken to still be the Ravens' "best option" as the No. 2 receiver. If Aiken mans the slot for a team with several outside field stretchers, he could quietly rack up 80-plus catches and 1,000 yards for the Ravens.

Busts

DeAndre Hopkins, WR, Houston Texans

This is no shot to Hopkins the player, as he is clearly one of the best receivers in the NFL. However, he was far less of a fantasy force once the Texans started playing winning football down the stretch. He topped 100 yards just once and only caught two touchdowns as Houston won four of their final six games. Play volume was his best friend last season, and the Texans are better when they play "small ball" and lean on the run game. He will still be a WR1, but shouldn't be one of the first seven receivers off the board.

Andrew Luck, QB, Indianapolis Colts

The public seems ready to pencil Luck right back into the top-3 fantasy quarterbacks, a mark he never hit even before his disastrous 2015 campaign. We have to wonder whether Luck will ever hit the ceiling many hoped he would as a fantasy passer. Not to mention, the options on this offense are looking less inspiring than ever these days. Be wary of sinking a pick in the first eight rounds into a quarterback, especially one with this many unspoken question marks.

Value Picks

Torrey Smith, WR, San Francisco 49ers

On average the last three years, Kelly's teams ran 114 more plays per season than the 49ers. Kelly's high-paced offense creates a rising tide for all skill position players in San Francisco. Torrey Smith is the only one with a clear starting spot and could push for 140 targets in the speedy X-Receiver role.

DeSean Jackson, WR, Washington Redskins

Kirk Cousins' ascension was right in line with Jackson's full return to the lineup after Washington's bye week. He is ridiculously undervalued as a "throat cutting" WR3.

Danny Woodhead, RB, San Diego Chargers

Every year the public ignores Danny Woodhead. Philip Rivers led the NFL in pass attempts in 2015, and the Chargers are unlikely to change their approach with Melvin Gordon undergoing microfracture surgery. Woodhead will be at worst an RB2 in PPR leagues once again.

Jay Ajayi, RB, Miami Dolphins

The Dolphins tried to bring in competition but their move proved fruitless. Ajayi was a workhorse in college and showed flashes as a rookie. With Ajayi's long-term health questions, the Dolphins might just shoot to get everything out of him this year. He's a starting NFL running back going outside the top-6 rounds.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise	Kevin White
Fantasy Flop	DeVante Parker
First-Round Bust	DeAndre Hopkins
Top Fantasy Rookie	Ezekiel Elliott (too easy) and Sterling Shepard
Comeback Player of the Year	Keenan Allen
Golden Oldie	Gary Barnidge
Must-Have Player	C.J. Prosise
Must-Avoid Player	Thomas Rawls

Must-Have Player

I'm completely obsessed with Prosise. The Seahawks sank a third-round draft pick into this receiving dynamo and were a far better passing team down the stretch last year. This could be the year where Russell Wilson finally takes the reins of this offense over the running game. If he does, Prosise offers a safe floor in PPR leagues as the pass-catching specialist. However, the upside is there for far more. There hasn't been a lick of positive news on Thomas Rawls yet this offseason, and the team does not expect him to play in the preseason. If he's ahead in his development, the athletic Prosise can steal the top gig from the formerly undrafted Rawls.

Sleepers

Markus Wheaton, WR, Pittsburgh Steelers

This guy was supposed to be a rising star. Then Martavis Bryant stole all his thunder. Then Martavis Bryant couldn't stay out of trouble, got suspended for the year, and lo and behold, look who is back to being Big Ben's second favorite option? Wheaton burned enough owners a few seasons back so that he is drafted late these days, but during the second half of 2015 he put up great numbers.

Kirk Cousins, QB, Washington Redskins

Here's a guy to keep in mind if the draft flow dictates you wait on drafting a signal caller. He'll be sitting there in the late rounds, yet the time could be now for Cousins to join the top-10 fantasy QBs. Continuity with Gruden's system, some shiny new weapons, and no RGIII. Mix in another year of swagger? DO YOU LIKE THIS? I love it.

Isaiah Crowell, RB, Cleveland Browns

Let me start by saying it is hard to draft a Cleveland Browns player in fantasy football. ... Or NFL football for that matter, BUT they are going to have to run the ball to get anything done this year, and I am playing a hunch Hue Jackson uses Crowell like he used Jeremy Hill in Cincinnati.

Jordan Howard, RB, Chicago Bears

John Fox is ground-and-pound friendly, the Bears will be better this year and Matt Forte is gone, so say hello to your goal line vulture – with a shot at doing much, much more.

Bust

Demaryius Thomas, WR, Denver Broncos

Okay this one is pretty simple: I don't care if Thomas is the second coming of Jerry Rice, he's stuck with a rookie QB or Mark Sanchez. The prosecution rests.

C.J. Anderson, RB, Denver Broncos

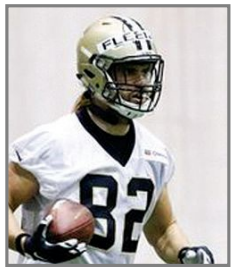
Am I picking on the defending world champs? I am, but this is more a reminder to any fantasy football owner with a modicum of historical awareness: The lead back in Denver when you are drafting your teams is NEVER the lead back once the games get real. Buyer beware.

Value Picks

Allen Hurns, WR, Jacksonville Jaguars

Allen Robinson is clearly the ascending star in Jax, but Hurns had a quietly wonderful season in 2015. It says here that Bortles and company are going to get even better in 2016, maybe joining the league's elite passing attacks. People are drafting him late, I say you're welcome!

Coby Fleener, TE, New Orleans Saints



Say hello to the artist formerly known as Jimmy Graham! Seriously, there is no reason Fleener can't explode in this offense, where he will absolutely become the No. 1 priority for Brees in the red zone. He's not going late in drafts, but there is a good chance he's sitting there if you miss the initial wave of Gronk/Reed/Eifert/Olsen.

Antonio Gates, TE, San Diego Chargers

Here's the guy to look at if you end up seriously slow-rolling your tight end pick and find yourself panicking: With Ladarius gone, Gates is back to being the alpha TE in S.D. – in fact, he never stopped being the man – ask anyone who drafted Green the last couple of years. Rivers loves Gates in the red zone.

Chris Hogan, WR, New England Patriots

Were you as surprised as I was when the Pats threw big money at Hogan? Then it starts to make sense. Brady may get the job done no matter how shallow his WR corps, but the one thing he depends on is a possession slot receiver. At this point you can't count on Julian Edelman or Danny Amendola to stay healthy. They've been playing against Hogan twice a year so he's been Belichick-vetted to a fair thee well. Here's betting he spends some weeks as the No. 1 target at some point this season.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise:	Markus Wheaton
Fantasy Flop:	Dez Bryant
First-Round Bust:	Devonta Freeman
Top Fantasy Rookie:	Ezekiel Elliott
Comeback Player of the Year:	Le'Veon Bell
Golden Oldie:	Carson Palmer
Must-Have Player:	T.Y. Hilton
Must-Avoid Player:	Demaryius Thomas

Fantasy Flop

Did you ever think you'd find yourself pining for Jon Kitna? Something tells me Dez will, in the vicinity of Week 8. While I find myself getting nervous that Dez could be entering the injury/lost games phase of his career, this is more about my complete lack of confidence that Tony Romo can make it through an entire season intact. We have an aging star with a recurring collarbone injury, and once again Dallas has no viable plan B at QB – certainly not one who can help the dynamic Bryant achieve top-5, maybe not even top-10 numbers.

Sleeper Prediction

Jalen Strong, WR, Houston Texans

Strong struggled to consistently produce as a rookie. After Strong reported to his first NFL off-season program out of shape, he never got out of HC Bill O'Brien's doghouse. This year, despite an arrest for marijuana possession in February, Strong showed up in great shape – down 30 pounds from last offseason. He'll have plenty of competition from rookies Will Fuller (the expected starter) and Braxton Miller, but Strong has a full year of experience with O'Brien's offense – a six-catch performance in the season finale adds to the intrigue.

Value Picks

Coby Fleener, TE, New Orleans Saints

The Saints signed Fleener to fill the void created when Benjamin Watson joined the Ravens as an unrestricted free agent. No surprise here, but head coach Sean Payton said the Saints were interested in Fleener more for what he can do in the passing game than in the run game. I expect them to keep him very busy in that regard. Remember, Fleener had 54 catches for 491 yards with three touchdowns in Indy last season despite playing half the year without Andrew Luck. He'll get ample opportunities working with Drew Brees in Payton's offense this season.

DeAngelo Williams, RB, Pittsburgh Steelers

There's a reason offensive coordinator Todd Haley recently said that Williams might be used to keep Le'Veon Bell fresh this season. The reason is Williams was downright Bell-like in his production when the younger starter missed time due to injury last season. And this year? We're still not sure exactly where Bell is in his return from the severely sprained knee that ended his 2015 campaign early. Don't be surprised if the Steelers lean on Williams more heavily early in the season.

Willie Snead, WR, New Orleans Saints

While the addition of rookie Michael Thomas raises questions about Snead's role, you shouldn't be thrown off track by this move. In 2015, Snead hauled in 69 receptions for 984 yards and three touchdowns in 15 games as he became Brees' No. 2 go-to-guy behind lead receiver Brandin Cooks. Snead isn't a dangerous threat when working on the outside, but his quickness and route-running skills have allowed him to excel when running short and intermediate routes from the slot. I expect Snead to flourish while Thomas adjusts to the speed of the NFL and polishes his skill set. Given that, I'll be looking for Snead to be the team's second-most targeted wideout this year.

Bust Prediction

Ezekiel Elliott, RB, Dallas Cowboys

I can see you all out there shaking your heads, so let me clarify: I am by no means stating that Elliott won't get you some fantasy points. But a rookie running back in Round 1? A rookie running back playing for the always-dicey Cowboys? With expectations this high? And that's really the problem. The expectations are so sky-high for Elliott that no matter how he finishes, I think it will disappoint those who use first-round picks to select him. Ezekiel Elliott. First-round bust. Brought to you and created by hype.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise: . . . . . Jeremy Hill, RB, CIN
First-Round Bust: . . . . . Ezekiel Elliott, RB DAL
Top Fantasy Rookie: . . . . . Sterling Shepherd, WR, NYG
Comeback Player of the Year: . . . . . DeMarco Murray, RB, TEN
Golden Oldie: . . . . . Darren McFadden, RB, DAL
Must-Have Player: . . . . . David Johnson, RB, ARI
Must-Avoid Player: . . . . . Ameer Abdullah, RB, DET

Comeback Player Of The Year

Murray is coming off what he considered a forced and unwanted vacation in Philadelphia. It's safe to assume he was pleased to be traded to Tennessee. And even with the selection of rookie Derrick Henry, I expect his role to be the one the Titans planned on when they landed him. Obviously, the Titans are banking on last year being an anomaly. Murray gives second-year QB Marcus Mariota a back who can handle a big workload in Mike Mularkey's "exotic smashmouth" attack. Murray said he's willing to do anything the Titans ask, "whether it is carrying the ball 20 times, 30 times, whatever." Do I expect Murry to bounce back to his 2014 level, when he led the league with 1,845 yards and 13 touchdowns with the Cowboys? Maybe not. But the change of scenery and an offense that will rely heavily on the run will certainly give him the chance to outperform expectations.

The Cheat Sheet scoring method: 4 pts for passing TDs, 6 pts for rushing TDs, 6 pts for receiving TDs. 1 pt for every 20 yds passing, 1 pt for every 10 yds rushing, 1 point per receptions (PPR), 1 pt for every 10 yds received. Kickers: 3 pts for field goals, 1 pt for extra points.

JIM McCORMICK ◆ ESPN.com

Jim has worked in sports journalism with a specific focus on fantasy content since 2006, contributing to NBA.com, The Washington Post, Bleacher Report and having spent the past eight years with ESPN as a basketball and football analyst. Jim served as the lead high school football editor for ESPNHS from 2010 to 2012 and covered the Philadelphia Phillies for several seasons in their prime run of division titles. From 2006 to 2009, Jim and Malik Spann published BLITZ Magazine, hitting over 13,000 retail stores in the process. Randy Moss made Jim work out with him in spring of 2008, having him drag a Mazda Miata subframe with four 90-pound plates across a beach volleyball court. He's still sore. It all started in a living room in suburban Philadelphia in 1993, when Jim took Emmitt Smith with the second overall pick despite being in Birds country.

Sleepers

Kenneth Dixon, RB, Baltimore Ravens

One of my favorite advanced metrics employed by the crack staff at Pro Football Focus is forced missed tackles and the rate at which NFL tailbacks produce missed tackles. It's almost akin to the idea of swinging strike rate for baseball pitchers in that it's an underlying metric that surfaces in many positive ways. Flip on Dixon's college tape, and you'll see plenty of swing and misses or forced missed tackles in this context. Dixon is a maven in open space and was wildly productive from the slot as a receiver in addition to working out of the backfield. The signs that Justin Forsett is eroding are clear, while Buck Allen is inferior to Dixon in almost every skill set at the position. This isn't a slight to his competition, but rather acknowledgement that there is a clear path to an impressive workload for Dixon in Baltimore. I'll be buying shares of Dixon heading into the 2016 campaign, as his dynamic ability to shake would-be tacklers could convert into big plays on the big stage.

Ryan Mathews, RB, Philadelphia Eagles

Injury prediction is a tricky and often flawed methodology in that there are so many uncontrollable factors to consider. There are some helpful resources and indicators to consider – previous injuries proving predictive at times – but I'm working on not letting noise or confirmation bias drive my pricing for 2016. This process leads me to players like Mathews, who has the skill set and potential opportunity to prove quite profitable for fantasy investors, despite years of contrary evidence (i.e. durability concerns). The other part of this approach is to say – so what if Mathews only gives me 11 games? If his impressive tape and playmaking from 2015 can sustain while he starts for Philly, then I can still net real rewards. Consolidating this backfield, something I failed to do in our draft for this magazine, is entirely affordable, as Wes Smallwood won't cost much and would likely consume meaningful work in place of Mathews (Darren Sproles is merely a specialist at this stage, with value isolated to deep PPR formats). This Doug Pederson offense will run the rock often and with dedicated power schemes. Not to mention the Reidian focus on receiving from the backfield. Meanwhile, Mathews was fourth among NFL backs last season with 2.93 yards before contact per rush and ninth in yards after contact per tote (2.15 YAC/att). Which is to say, if we worry too much about his potentially low floor, we might miss out on Mathews' high ceiling.

Bust

Justin Forsett, RB, Baltimore Ravens

Investing in Forsett (I dislike the word "owned" and its synonyms for this hobby) was entirely fun in 2014. An undersized, late-blooming dynamo drove fantasy teams to titles with over 1,500 yards from scrimmage that season. Conversely, last season was riddled with injury and what have been somewhat glaring inefficiency issues in the passing game. We are somewhat conditioned to assume that small and shifty backs equal efficient receivers, but that's simply not the case for Forsett. That said, both Buck Allen and Kenneth Dixon claim superior receiving skill sets, and far fewer miles and, well, days on earth, than Forsett. I have serious doubts about investing in Forsett this season and wouldn't consider him a requisite acquisition if you are seeking to get shares of the Ravens backfield.

Jordan Matthews, WR, Philadelphia Eagles

I find it puzzling a player with such a rare blend of size and strength – Matthews ranks in the 75th percentile and up in height, weight, arm length, hand size and bench press among positional prospects since 1999, per MockDraftable – hasn't been able to earn significant snaps as an outside receiver into his third professional season. Doug Pederson has intimated Matthews has struggled on the outside in off-season work so far and is still best suited for the slot. To be fair and balanced, Matthews was 27th in fantasy points per game at the position last season, and we've seen Marques Colston produce with a similar build from the slot. Meanwhile, his statistical success was found in Chip Kelly's receiver-friendly, snap-happy scheme. Now that Kelly went to the 49ers and Andy Reid's conversely conservative West Coast system is back in South Philly, I believe Matthews' ceiling isn't much higher than his 2015 output.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise:	Marcus Mariota
Fantasy Flop:	Justin Forsett
First-Round Bust:	Devonta Freeman
Top Fantasy Rookie:	Ezekiel Elliott
Comeback Player of the Year:	Jordy Nelson
Golden Oldie:	Antonio Gates
Must-Have Player:	Ryan Mathews
Must-Avoid Player:	Justin Forsett

Fantasy Surprise

Coach Mike Mularkey has promised an uptick in designed runs for the Mariota, which not only would lighten the box without an extra safety or dime 'backer for the backfield but would also add immense fantasy value to a player who – if we remove an injury-riddled Week 15 at New England that saw him leave early – finished 10th in ESPN standard fantasy points per game among signal-callers as a rookie. That's not a clerical error; the former Duck produced 18.1 standard fantasy points per game while facing injuries, a coaching change and a depleted receiving corps. I'll have a great deal of Mariota shares this summer, with real rewards on the way in this "exotic smashmouth" offense Mularkey is building.

The Cheat Sheet scoring method: 4 pts for passing TDs, 6 pts for rushing TDs, 6 pts for receiving TDs. 1 pt for every 20 yds passing, 1 pt for every 10 yds rushing, 1 point per receptions (PPR), 1 pt for every 10 yds received. Kickers: 3 pts for field goals, 1 pt for extra points.

JEN RYAN ◆ FootballDiehards.com

Jen considers herself lucky to live in New Jersey and work in New York City. She loves her job working in the accounting department for the television show Law & Order: Special Victims Unit, but fantasy football is where her heart is. The number crunching and spreadsheet work at her day job has translated nicely to fantasy football, and it helped her boast a 22 percent win rate in MFL10s in 2015. Last year, Jen spent her Sunday mornings talking FanDuel strategy with Bob Harris and Jeff Mans on Sirius/XM Fantasy Sports Radio. She is addicted to best-ball, adores her family redraft league, and is determined to win $1 million each and every week in daily fantasy football. No Sunday is complete without her crock pot and, of course, her Cowboys. She is a senior writer/DFS expert for FootballDiehards.com, featured writer on GridironExperts.com, and contributor to FantasyPros.com. Jen's work has also been featured on USA Today as well as the USA Today hosted website TheCowboysWire.com.

Sleepers and Busts

The later rounds are where sleeper picks can turn into gold. Coming into the 2016 season there are a few late-round receivers that come to mind.

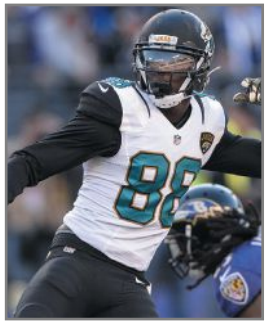
Torrey Smith has the potential to turn in a handful of WR1 weeks under Chip Kelly. The 49ers were simply a mess last season, and Smith saw career lows in every category except average yards per catch. His 20.1 yards per grab in 2015 were a career best. This is what excites me most about Smith's potential under Kelly. He is the undisputed deep threat and could be in for a scoring spike. He hit pay dirt just four times last year, but in the 2014 season he scored 11 touchdowns on 49 receptions.

Kendall Wright has all but been forgotten in fantasy circles and arguably should be after a down year. He only appeared in 10 games but was on a pace that would have netted 96 targets, 58 receptions, 653 yards and five touchdowns over 16 games. While these are not exactly eye-popping numbers, I do expect Marcus Mariota to take a leap forward in his sophomore campaign. The addition of DeMarco Murray in the backfield could open up the passing game, which was irrelevant outside of Delanie Walker in 2015. Wright will cost you essentially nothing in drafts and could return value as a WR3/flex play with WR2 upside.

The top late-round player in general for me this year is Robert Woods, especially in PPR leagues. Woods has averaged over seven targets per game since 2013. He is consistently a target machine, and with Sammy Watkins' health perennially questionable you have to figure this could be Woods' breakout year. He will be entering a second season with Tyrod Taylor, and the Bills shipped off Chris Hogan which could create even more opportunities for Woods. He is another player who you can likely draft as your Mr. Irrelevant that could wind up being a steal.

A few players with "bust alert" written all over them are Chris Hogan, Austin Seferian-Jenkins and Allen Hurns. Hogan does not have 1,000 career yards but there is a ton of hype around him due to his landing spot. I am personally not interested in anyone catching the ball in New England not named Julian Edelman or Rob Gronkowski.

Seferian-Jenkins' health concerns me as much as the TE2 on the Tampa Bay Buccaneers' depth chart (Cameron Brate). In two seasons Seferian-Jenkins has managed 16 total games. It is simply a matter of health, but head coach Dirk Koetter has talked up Brate enough for me to pay attention. The 6'5" Brate could be utilized in scoring situations. I will hold off on both Tampa Bay tight ends, but if I had to roll the dice on one it would be the player who will not cost me a mid-round draft pick.



While I will not dispute Hurns' talent and upside I would argue we may have already seen his top season in 2015 and we could be chasing those numbers. A wise man named Bob Harris once told me I should not draft last year's best fantasy team, and I feel that's what one would be doing by selecting Hurns at his current ADP. It also seems obvious to me that Hurns' stellar fantasy season was a byproduct of the Jaguars' consistent, negative game flow. Blake Bortles had no choice but to throw the ball all over the place, and with an upgraded defense it is hard to imagine he has 606 passing attempts again in 2016. Touchdown regression is coming for the entire offense with the exception of Julius Thomas, who could be set to top his five touchdowns from last season.

Fantasy Surprise:	Kamar Aiken
Fantasy Flop:	Chris Hogan
First-Round Bust:	David Johnson
Top Fantasy Rookie:	Sterling Shepard
Comeback Player of the Year:	Tony Romo
Golden Oldie:	Vincent Jackson
Must-Have Player:	Duke Johnson
Must-Avoid Player:	Allen Hurns

First Round Bust

This may be an unpopular opinion but my first-round bust pick is David Johnson. His second-half surge in 2015 is reminiscent of C.J. Anderson in 2014. Anderson was a 2015 first-rounder that did not pay off, and I fear this could be Johnson's fate in 2016. Chris Johnson re-signed with the team, and Bruce Arians is still hell-bent on involving Andre Ellington. The Arizona Cardinals will be playoff contenders coming into the season and could deploy a rotation to preserve the health of all their backs. Johnson's ADP is too rich for my blood and he has the potential to bust as a first-round selection.

GARY DAVENPORT ◆ FantasySharks.com

A member of the Fantasy Sports Writers Association and Pro Football Writers of America who resides in Columbus, Ohio, Gary has been featured on a number of fantasy websites and in nationally circulated publications, including the magazines of Football Sports Publications Inc. Gary also appears regularly on both satellite and terrestrial radio, including weekly spots on Sirius XM and KDUS-AM in Phoenix and live from Radio Row at Super Bowl XLIX. Twice in the past three years Gary has been nominated for an award by the FSWA, and in 2015 Gary brought home the hardware as winner of the FSWA award for Print Article of the Year. Gary was one of the co-founders of, and Head Writer at, Fantasy Football Oasis before joining Fantasy Sharks as an IDP Senior Staff Writer and Bleacher Report as an NFL and Fantasy Football Analyst in 2011. While considered one of the industry's leading experts on Individual Defensive Player fantasy football leagues, he still remembers enough about the offensive side of the ball (the quarterback is the guy who throws stuff, right?) to offer these insights on the upcoming season. Some of them might even be correct. Stranger things have happened.

Sleepers

I've decided not to play around with my sleepers this year. Rather than rattling off names who will be on so many lists they can't possibly be sleepers anymore.

And in that respect, I think it's reasonable to include a running back who will enter training camp third on his team's depth chart – behind a pair of players that said team just re-upped. Of course, Devontae Booker of the Denver Broncos may be No. 3 on the depth chart and a third-day pick in the 2016 NFL draft, but he isn't going to stay there long. Mark Dulgerian of NFL.com wrote of Booker, "From his versatility to his one-cut downhill style, this is a great fit." I expect the 5-11, 219-pounder to waste no time opening eyes in his new home.

Much has been made of the opportunity presented to Pittsburgh Steelers wide receiver Markus Wheaton in light of Martavis Bryant's year-long suspension, but the player true fantasy sharks should be targeting is second-year pro Sammie Coates. Coates told The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette he knows what's on the line. "I need to improve in every area. I know that," Coates said. "It's a big year for me." Coates is the perfect receiver to target late in drafts. Young, inexpensive and oozing upside.

Busts

Listen. I'm as big a fan of Minnesota Vikings running back Adrian Peterson as anyone. And I'm well aware that he's regularly defied expectations over a career that will one day likely land him in Canton. He defied expectations when he ran for over 2,000 yards less than a year after tearing his ACL. He defied expectations when he led the NFL in rushing a year ago at 30 after sitting out the previous season. But at some point age catches up to everyone, and Peterson is a 31-year-old back approaching 2,500 career carries. Is "All Day" still a fantasy RB1? Until the wheels fall off, you bet. But each and every year the odds of that happening go up.

Just as age and career workloads leading to decline at the running back position is an undeniable truism in fantasy football, so is this tidbit – sky-high touchdown numbers are just what they appear to be – a fluke highly unlikely to be repeated. I have been beating a drum for Jacksonville Jaguars wideout Allen Robinson since before he was drafted by the Jags. I like his ability to run routes with crispness and precision. Love his willingness to fight for the football. However, fantasy owners drafting the third-year veteran as a top-5 receiver expecting a repeat of last year's league-leading 14 touchdown grabs are setting themselves up to be disappointed.

Value Picks

San Diego Chargers running back Danny Woodhead has a reputation as a player mostly of interest to fantasy owners in PPR scoring systems. And sure enough, Woodhead finished 2015 ranked third at his position in that format. However, the ninth-year veteran also finished as a RB1 in standard scoring leagues thanks to his 1,100 total yards and nine scores. Those numbers might represent Woodhead's ceiling, but there's also a good chance Woodhead will approach that ceiling again in 2016. 2015 first-round pick Melvin Gordon had microfracture surgery in the offseason, and even in a perfect world the Bolts are probably going to want to limit the youngster's touches, especially early in the year. That means touches for the old man.

I'll stay in sunny San Diego for my second value pick. Whether it was Vincent Jackson, Danario Alexander or Malcom Brown, Philip Rivers has made a career of making vertical threats into fantasy assets with the Chargers. That bodes well for newcomer Travis Benjamin, who has an early ADP at Fantasy Pros that puts him squarely in fantasy WR4 territory. Rivers told ESPN that Benjamin is the "fastest receiver he's ever thrown to," and the pair are reportedly already clicking. All Benjamin has to do is match last year's numbers to be a value. If he betters them he'll be a steal.

Fantasy Surprise: ..... Tavon Austin – WR, LAR
Fantasy Flop: ..... Devonta Freeman – RB, ATL
First-Round Bust: ..... Adrian Peterson – RB, MIN
Top Fantasy Rookie: ..... Ezekiel Elliott – RB, DAL
Comeback Player of the Year: ..... Jordy Nelson – WR, GB
Golden Oldie: ..... Frank Gore – RB, IND
Must-Have Player: ..... Jay Ajayi – RB, MIA
Must-Avoid Player: ..... Jeremy Hill – RB, CIN

Golden Oldie

In this very space, in this very category, in this very magazine one year ago I mentioned Gore as a "golden oldie" who would afford fantasy owners substantial value in the upcoming season. Yes, Gore failed to hit the 1,000-yard mark on the ground for the first time since 2010. But Gore, even in a "down" year, topped 1,200 total yards, scored seven touchdowns and finished among the top-15 running backs in scoring systems that afford a point for receptions. Gore's old, but he'll once again be the unquestioned lead back in Indy in 2016. If it ain't broke, don't fix it.

Sleepers

Marvin Jones, WR, Detroit Lions

Jones flashed double-digit touchdown upside in 2013, and there's a need in Detroit for a red-zone threat now that Calvin Johnson has retired. Golden Tate is pretty much a lock to lead the team in catches, but the Lions throw enough to support two fantasy-relevant receivers -- especially if Jones' scoring potential returns. The playmakers opposite Jones don't have the pedigree that A.J. Green has, so it's not unthinkable that he becomes the top receiving option for the Lions in 2016.

Tevin Coleman, RB, Atlanta Falcons

Devonta Freeman was one of the least efficient running backs since the turn of the century as a rookie in 2014, and outside of an anomalistic stretch early in 2015, he was just as bad as a sophomore. Freeman's workload might be enough to make Coleman a non-factor in fantasy football, but Coleman showed explosiveness when given a chance. If he can avoid fumbles, and if Freeman winds up being the shaky back his metrics suggest he is, then Coleman could be this year's breakout running back.

Kevin White, WR, Chicago Bears

White was the seventh-overall pick in 2015, and he has had a year to get acclimated to the NFL even though he didn't play a snap. His 6-3, 215-pound frame makes him a prime candidate to score touchdowns, and the Bears need players who can do just that. Oh, and Jay Cutler's metrics show that he is better than perception indicates.

Busts

Todd Gurley, RB, Los Angeles Rams

Gurley's big-play ability yielded positive expected points overall for the Rams in 2015, but no back was as reliant on long gains to boost his cumulative numbers as Gurley. The offense did nothing to improve (unless you count adding a rookie quarterback), and Gurley's boom-or-bust style isn't going to be fun as a first-round pick. He'll score plenty of fantasy points, but he's going to have weeks that can cost you a win when he doesn't break off a big gain.

Blake Bortles, QB, Jacksonville Jaguars

This feels like cheating, as Bortles is obviously going to regress in 2016. In 2014, Bortles threw 38 passes in the red zone. In 2015, he threw 92 times from inside the 20. That's a big reason why he threw for 35 touchdowns. Only three quarterbacks (of 27 in history) have ever built on a 35-plus-touchdown season by throwing for more the following year. Bortles can still be fine, but he's not an elite passer by any measure, so he shouldn't be a mid-round draft pick.

Thomas Rawls, RB, Seattle Seahawks

Rawls showed last season why running backs are replaceable in today's NFL, but he could be at risk of the same turnover in 2016 after his ankle injury to end 2015. Seattle drafted two running backs this season (C.J. Prosise in the third round and Alex Collins in the fifth round), and Rawls has maxed out at 10 catches in a season dating back to his days in college. As a PPR pick, he doesn't offer a great floor, and his grasp on the starting role might be misleading. That makes him a bust candidate at his current price.

Value Picks

Ryan Mathews, RB, Philadelphia Eagles

When it comes to earning consistent gains on the ground, Mathews has been rather unparalleled since entering the league. He's got the "injury prone" label but seems locked into a starting role for a team with little depth behind him. Trust his metrics and workload to lead to a big fantasy season in 2015.

Dwayne Allen, TE, Indianapolis Colts

In 2014, Allen scored eight times in 11 games with at least two targets. Coby Fleener is out of town, and Allen is healthy. His upside isn't baked into his draft cost, and that could make him a draft-day steal.

Melvin Gordon, RB, San Diego Chargers

Gordon's abysmal rookie season makes him an easy player to overlook, but the resulting discount makes him a great value. The Chargers' offensive line has to experience better luck with injuries, and Gordon handled a big workload in 2015. A healthier line and consistent usage will lead to usable weeks, even if he's unspectacular at best.

Demaryius Thomas, WR, Denver Broncos

Thomas is a good enough athlete to overcome bad quarterback play, which he had to do in 2015. He still possesses top-10 upside given the volume he can handle and touchdown ability he offers. Only three receivers in 2015 had more top-24 finishes in PPR leagues than Thomas, and that makes him a value at his price.

Must-Avoid Player:	DeMarco Murray

Fantasy Surprise

Abdullah had as much hype as any running back entering 2015, but he disappointed owners. His late-season advanced metrics, though, suggest the hype was warranted. Lauded for his big-play potential, Abdullah actually added expected points to his offense at a top-10 rate after Week 10 despite a modest offensive line. The Lions went lineman-heavy in the draft, and that historically tends to boost efficiency. Abdullah is Detroit's best chance to be an every-down game-changer, and everything is trending up for the second-year back. His off-season shoulder surgery and letdown rookie season are only making him more affordable.

The Cheat Sheet scoring method: 4 pts for passing TDs, 6 pts for rushing TDs, 6 pts for receiving TDs. 1 pt for every 20 yds passing, 1 pt for every 10 yds rushing, 1 point per receptions (PPR), 1 pt for every 10 yds received. Kickers: 3 pts for field goals, 1 pt for extra points.

MIKE DEMPSEY ◆ Sirius/XM

Mike Dempsey is best known to the fantasy sports community as the co-host of both Football Diehards (with Bob Harris) and Runnin' w/ MJD (with Maurice Jones-Drew) on SiriusXM Fantasy Sports Radio. He has been with the network since their first season on the air and has covered numerous Super Bowls and NFL Drafts for SiriusXM in addition to his regular hosting duties. Mike has been an avid fantasy football player for nearly 20 years, which coincides with his career as a sports broadcaster. In addition to doing play-by-play and color commentary for a wide variety of sports, Mike has hosted numerous sports talk shows over the last two decades. He currently hosts Jaguars Today on 1010XL radio in Jacksonville as well as co-hosting the pre- and post-game shows on the Jacksonville Jaguars Radio Network on game days in the fall. When he is not studying for his latest fantasy draft, you can find Mike on the golf course or spending time with his wife Heather and son Colin in Saint Augustine, FL.

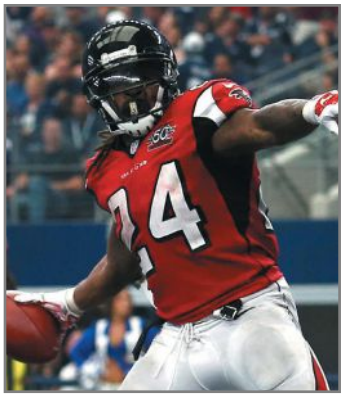
Sleepers and Busts

Sleepers and busts are difficult categories to define as so much is dependent on league size, scoring system, etc. That being said, here are some guys who could win or lose you leagues this year, depending on how things shake out.

You want a QB sleeper? How about Geno Smith? Ryan Fitzpatrick set several Jets passing records in 2015, and if he doesn't come to terms with Gang Green, Smith would likely get the call. In one start last year, Geno threw for 265 and two TDs. Even if it takes an injury to Fitz to give Smith an opening, any QB throwing to the weapons the Jets have has to be considered a sleeper at worst.

I don't know if I would call Andy Dalton an outright bust, but if Tyler Eifert can't stay healthy, there might not be enough help for AJ Green in the passing game.

At RB, I like rookies that have a chance to steal a starting gig. That list this year includes Devontae Booker, Kenneth Dixon, Jordan Howard, C.J. Prosise and DeAndre Washington. I won't go all-in on any of them, but I will sprinkle each of them onto at least a couple of my deeper rosters. I like Bilal Powell to have a solid impact in PPR leagues -- if Matt Forte misses any time, look out.



Devonta Freeman will be overdrafted in most leagues. I don't know if that makes him a bust but Tevin Coleman definitely should be on you sleeper list.

Potential WR/TE busts include Demaryius Thomas (could be a QB carousel in Denver) and Zach Ertz (seemingly perennially overrated) while sleepers to watch for include Mohammed Sanu (Julio draws double and triple teams) and Ladarius Green (just a great overall offense).

Value Picks

If you follow the trends in fantasy football (and I assume you do), the quarterback position is where you can usually find the most consistent value on draft day. Players like Blake Bortles, Philip Rivers, Eli Manning and Kirk Cousins were drafted as fantasy backups in many leagues last year and all ended up as top-10 fantasy QBs. In fact, many owners were down on Cam Newton last year, and he ended up as the top scorer in many formats.

This year, I think Cousins represents great value again, and I will be targeting him after at least 10 QBs come off the board. Other QBs that I feel represent great potential value are Tyrod Taylor, Marcus Mariota and Robert Griffin III. Tom Brady could once again be a value if owners are scared off by a potential four-game suspension.

At RB, Doug Martin tops my list of value plays. As of this writing, his ADP is that of RB11. I like him to turn in a top-5 season. DeMarco Murray seems like a bargain at RB17 as the Titans have consistently talked up using Murray as a feature back in 2016 despite drafting Derrick Henry. Many PPR specialists can be had for great value as well so keep names like Danny Woodhead, Bilal Powell and Theo Riddick in mind.

Randall Cobb is currently being drafted as WR21. This just one year after he was going in the late second round in 12 team leagues. The return of Jordy Nelson should help roll coverage away from Cobb, and you stand to benefit. Michael Crabtree as WR38 seems like a steal based on the emerging Raiders' offense and the team's commitment to Crabtree via a contract extension.

Finally, getting Antonio Gates just outside the top-12 TEs looks like a value play as well. As long as he remains healthy, Gates will once again be targeted heavily by Philip Rivers.

2016 Predictions

Fantasy Surprise:	Tevin Coleman
Fantasy Flop:	Justin Forsett
First-Round Bust:	Devonta Freeman
Top Fantasy Rookie:	Ezekiel Elliott
Comeback Player of the Year:	Jordy Nelson
Golden Oldie:	Tom Brady
Must-Have Player:	Kirk Cousins
Must-Avoid Player:	Steve Smith

Must-Have Player

From Week 10 through Week 16 last year, Cousins was the No. 3 ranked fantasy QB. He was particularly dominant in the fantasy playoffs. Washington added first-round pick Josh Doctson to their capable receiving corps, which is led by fantasy stud TE Jordan Reed. Pierre Garcon is still serviceable and, if the Redskins can get a healthy season from DeSean Jackson, Cousins' weapons are looking even better in 2016.

The All-Undervalued, All-Stars of IDP

By Gary Davenport, IDP Senior Staff Writer, Fantasy Sharks

One of the keys to success in IDP fantasy football leagues is the ability to get value late on the defensive side of the ball. Sure, it's nice to roster Houston Texans defensive end J.J. Watt, but his first-round price tag means drafting in scramble-mode on offense.

However, if you know which undervalued defensive players to target later in your draft, you can load up on early offensive talent, safe in the knowledge that your targets will vastly outperform their draft slots.

And wouldn't you know it? I just so happen to have a full roster of defensive players who fit that bill.

DL1: Mario Williams – DE, Miami Dolphins (ADP: DL25)

After a wildly disappointing 2015, Williams told ESPN's James Walker he intends to show the Dolphins they didn't make a mistake in signing him. "I think the most motivation that I have – and that I want to show – is to this [Dolphins] organization," Williams said. As recently as 2014 Williams was a top-5 fantasy lineman, and at 31 there's still ample gas left in the tank.

DL2: Rob Ninkovich – DE, New England Patriots (ADP: DL23)

If it makes you feel better to flip-flop this duo (since Ninkovich is actually going a bit sooner than Williams in early IDP drafts at My Fantasy League) have at it. The point here is that Ninkovich – a high-floor fantasy option who more than makes up for so-so big-play production with his steady tackle numbers – is the perfect complement to a sack artist like Williams. And also like Williams, Ninkovich struggled through a subpar 2015 statistically. But with Chandler Jones now in Arizona, the 11th-year veteran's snap count is bound to increase in the upcoming season.

LB1: DeAndre Levy – OLB, Detroit Lions (ADP: LB21)

It isn't hard to see why Levy's ADP has fallen – he played in only a handful of snaps last year thanks to a hip injury. But 2014's No. 3 fantasy finisher among linebackers told the Detroit Free Press he should be all systems go in 2016. "I'll be ready for training camp and the first game," Levy said. "I'm just trying to prepare the same way I always do." Assuming the 29-year-old isn't blowing smoke, there's little reason to think a big rebound isn't on the horizon. He's easily the team's best linebacker.

LB2: Jordan Hicks – ILB, Philadelphia Eagles (ADP: LB22)

Hicks, who played very well as a rookie last year before tearing a pectoral muscle, told the Philadelphia Inquirer he's more than up to the challenge of playing the MIKE in Jim Schwartz' 4-3 scheme. "I've always been one when I've been on the field to take control naturally," Hicks said. "It's just the position I've always put myself in and felt comfortable taking on, being able to direct traffic and get everything right and put the pieces together and solve the puzzle." If he stays healthy, Hicks could be poised for a monster season.

DB1: Clayton Geathers – SS, Indianapolis Colts (ADP: DB20)

Geathers, who steps into the Colts' starting lineup this year thanks to the departure of Dwight Lowery, was quite clear when telling ESPN what his favorite part of prowling the back end of a defense was. "I like making contact out there, putting my face mask on people," Geathers said. After playing well in his limited opportunities as a rookie, Geathers may well be the best safety in IDP leagues that most people haven't heard of. Use that to your advantage on draft day.

DB2: Ibraheim Campbell – SS, Cleveland Browns (ADP: DB32)

Making hay with your DB picks in an IDP draft is a two-step process. First and foremost, wait. Options in the secondary are as plentiful as they are unpredictable. Second, when it does come time to draft defensive backs, shoot for the moon. Go with youth and upside. Campbell's a poster boy for this two-pronged attack. He's anything but a household name, but after the Browns cut bait on veteran Donte Whitner, Campbell will enter the starting lineup as the last line of defense on a Cleveland team whose defense is going to be on the field all day long in 2016.

FLEX: Kiko Alonso – ILB, Miami Dolphins (ADP: LB47)

Alonso has suffered season-ending knee injuries each of the past two years. Nonetheless, he told the team's website he's confident he'll rebound in 2016. "I like to think at the linebacker position that I can do it all. I think to be a great linebacker now – in this day and age – you have to do it all. You have to be able to stop the run. You have to be able to play in coverage. You have to be able to play man-to-man." If he does indeed do it all this season, there's legitimate top-10 upside here.

The Cheat Sheet scoring method: 4 pts for passing TDs, 6 pts for rushing TDs, 6 pts for receiving TDs. 1 pt for every 20 yds passing, 1 pt for every 10 yds rushing, 1 point per receptions (PPR), 1 pt for every 10 yds received. Kickers: 3 pts for field goals, 1 pt for extra points.

QB

ADP

We have added a new piece of information to our player rankings this year -- the Average Draft Position (ADP). The ADP, which is included with the ranking -- separated by a colon -- represents an average of several recent drafts from around the country. The representation we are using here is by position. You can also convert the ADP to an overall draft position such as 12.07 (12th round - seventh pick). The ADP gives you a feel for where a player is going around the country, allowing you to adjust your draft selection in order to acquire the best players possible. If the CheatSheets magazine ranks a player as the 14th best QB and his ADP is 21, then you may want to wait until a few more QBs are taken before selecting him.

Team Target (TM TRG) is the percentage of pass plays in which an offense "targets" the player in question. This stat can be very telling -- adding a unique perspective on draft day. Percentage Caught (% CHT) further enhances the Team Target stat by providing the number of times each player came through with a reception when targeted.

1:1 Cam NEWTON — CAR

YEAR	TM	FSV	TOT: PASS TDs	PASSING ATT/CMP	PASS YARDS	INT	RUSH YARDS	GP	RZone Pass

Newton had a moderately successful 2015 season -- if you consider 45 total touchdowns, an NFL MVP nod, a 15-win regular season and a trip to Super Bowl 50 "moderately successful." Newton was also fantasy football's top-scoring player at his position a year ago. And yet, despite all those accolades, head coach Ron Rivera told David Newton of ESPN.com Newton still has plenty of room to improve. "Last year we talked about developing certain throws and he did that," Rivera said. "Can he develop and get better physically? Yeah. His skill set can continue to get better. I know they're constantly working on his technique, his footwork, his delivery, and then again work on the mental aspect as well. I'm not putting anybody on blast. I'm just challenging him that he can become a better football player." Asking the sixth-year veteran just to repeat last year's production is a tall enough order, but fantasy owners willing to pay up for Newton's services undoubtedly like the sound of even bigger and better things in 2016.

2:2 Aaron RODGERS — GNB

YEAR	TM	FSV	TOT: PASS TDs	PASSING ATT/CMP	PASS YARDS	INT	RUSH YARDS	GP	RZone Pass
2015	GNB	355	32:31	572/347	3821	8	344	16	94
2014	GNB	409	40:38	520/341	4381	5	269	16	100
2013	GNB	206	17:17	290/193	2536	6	120	9	43
Average		324	29:28	460/293	3579	6	244	13	79

Andrew Luck wasn't the only "elite" fantasy quarterback who struggled mightily in 2015. Rodgers finished closer to the back end of the QB top 10 than the front, as a Green Bay offense that lost Jordy Nelson before Week 1 lurched their way through the season. Still, as bad as things were last year, CBS Sports points out that they could have been considerably worse. "Playing all of last season without Nelson," they said "with an average receiving corps and with less-than-desired completion percentages and passing averages, Rodgers had nine games with at least 22 Fantasy points and finished as the seventh-best fantasy quarterback. That should be a testament to how good Rodgers is. With a favorable schedule and his top receiver ready to play (along with new tight end Jared Cook), Rodgers should be in great position to have one of his best seasons of his career." There may be a silver lining to last year's disappointment -- a lower ADP in this season's fantasy drafts makes Rodgers a much more appealing target.

3:4 Russell WILSON — SEA

5th year Age: 27 Ht: 5-11 Wt: 204 BYE: 5

YEAR	TM	FSV	TOT: PASS TDs	PASSING ATT/CMP	PASS YARDS	INT	RUSH YARDS	GP	RZone Pass
2015	SEA	398	35:34	483/329	4024	8	553	16	45
2014	SEA	376	26:20	452/285	3475	7	849	16	57
2013	SEA	331	27:26	407/257	3357	9	539	16	41
Average		368	29:27	447/290	3618	8	647	16	47

The times they are-a-changing in the Pacific Northwest. If the ground-and-pound Seahawks of years past were all about "Beast Mode," the 2015 Seahawks were all about a career year from Wilson, who set personal bests in just about every category through the air. As Sheil Kapadia of ESPN wrote, Wilson's big year impressed head coach Pete Carroll. "There's nothing that Russell can't handle," Carroll said, "so I need to creatively keep coming up with ways, as we all do as coaches, to keep pressing him forward so that he can understand more about the game so that he can function at the highest level he can function at. There is nothing holding him back -- work ethic, he has the smarts, the mentality and the physical makeup to do whatever you can do in this game." Wilson's ability to make plays with his legs compensates for a receiving corps that isn't on par with the Packers and Colts. If Wilson isn't already an "elite" fantasy option he's knocking at the door, so be prepared to pony up an early pick if you want him on draft day.

4:6 Ben ROETHLISBERGER — PIT

13th year Age: 34 Ht: 6-4 Wt: 242 BYE: 8

YEAR	TM	FSV	TOT: PASS TDs	PASSING ATT/CMP	PASS YARDS	INT	RUSH YARDS	GP	RZone Pass
2015	PIT	283	21:21	469/319	3938	16	29	12	60
2014	PIT	377	32:32	608/408	4952	9	27	16	89
2013	PIT	341	29:28	584/375	4261	14	99	16	58
Average		334	27:27	553/367	4383	13	51	14	69

After a 2015 season in which the Steelers' offensive skill positions (Roethlisberger included) were wracked by injuries, Big Ben told ESPN's Jeremy Fowler he's been doing "a lot of cardio" in an effort to stay on the field entering his 13th NFL season. "You want to be the best you can be. You want to win Super Bowls," Roethlisberger said. "Felt it was the right thing to do at the right time. All of us need to now. We've had a lot of guys that carry a lot on their shoulders anyway, but we'll all need to step up." Roethlisberger's agent also told a Pittsburgh-area radio station that Big Ben isn't quite so big in 2016 -- having lost about 15 pounds in the offseason. Roethlisberger, unfortunately, also lost two key targets in the passing game thanks to Heath Miller's retirement and Martavis Bryant's suspension. The veteran still has arguably the NFL's best running back and wideout in Le'Veon Bell and Antonio Brown though, and that duo affords him significant fantasy upside at a lower draft-day price than Rodgers or Luck.

5:5 Drew BREES — NOR

16th year Age: 37 Ht: 6-0 Wt: 221 BYE: 5

YEAR	TM	FSV	TOT: PASS TDs	PASSING ATT/CMP	PASS YARDS	INT	RUSH YARDS	GP	RZone Pass
2015	NOR	378	33:32	627/428	4870	11	14	15	68
2014	NOR	392	34:33	659/456	4952	17	68	16	82
2013	NOR	437	42:39	650/446	5162	12	52	16	71
Average		402	36:35	645/443	4994	13	44	15	73

In the opinion of Eric Single of Sports Illustrated, there may not be a quarterback in the entire NFL with more to prove in 2016 than Brees. "'What's wrong with Drew Brees?' we asked as he scuffled through two disconcerting losses to open 2015 and sat out the next week with a bruised rotator cuff in his throwing shoulder," Single said. "Then he nearly doubled his season passing touchdown total with seven TDs in a Week 7 win over the Giants; then he threw 12 touchdowns and just one interception in December, playing through a partially-torn plantar fascia in his foot in the final two games (both Saints wins). Still, Brees is 37, and now that we've seen him look human in short spurts, it should be easier to notice when his play takes a step back for good." The end's getting close for Brees, but he ranked sixth among fantasy QBs (in NFL.com default fantasy scoring) even in a "down" 2015. Factor in the drop in his ADP this year, and he's a solid fantasy value as a weekly starter.

6:3 Andrew LUCK IND

5th year Age: 26 Ht: 6-4 Wt: 234									BYE: 10
YEAR	TM	FSV	TOT: PASS TDs	PASSING ATT/CMP	PASS YARDS	INT	RUSH YARDS	GP	RZone Pass

Average		320	28:26	493/295	3488	12	282	13	52

After ranking as the No. 1 quarterback in fantasy football in 2014, Luck carried a first-round ADP into fantasy drafts last year. What followed was a disaster -- Luck missed over half the season with an assortment of injuries, posted easily the worst statistical season of his career and finished outside the top 25 among signal-callers in fantasy points. However, Indy head coach Chuck Pagano told Philip Wilson of Scout that Luck's ready to go this year and eager to rinse off the stink from last season's faceplant. "He looks really good," said Pagano. "I think he's in a good place. Like everybody else, he's learning right now. He's working on his fundamentals and his techniques. He's gone back and obviously looked at himself with the body of work that he had. I know he missed a lot of time, but he's doing a great job. He's progressing like everybody else." Luck remains a talented player at the helm of a potent offense, and a fantasy option who might actually be a value in 2016 assuming last year's struggles cause his ADP to dip.

7:8 Carson PALMER ARI

YEAR	TM	FSV	TOT: PASS TDs	PASSING ATT/CMP	PASS YARDS	INT	RUSH YARDS	GP	RZone Pass

When last we saw Carson Palmer, he was turning the ball over approximately 37 times in a blowout loss to the Carolina Panthers in the NFC Championship Game. However, the 36-year-old told Darren Urban of the team's website he's eager to get back after it despite how the 2015 season ended. "I don't look at that as a negative," Palmer said. "That's the challenge. I love this position and I love this game because of the challenge. I enjoy that. I enjoy working to prove doubters wrong, I enjoy waking up every morning trying to improve on something. That's why I play the position." With that said, playing the position is a lot easier when you're at the helm of a friendly scheme with a talented young tailback in David Johnson and arguably the league's best wideout corps in Larry Fitzgerald, Michael Floyd and John Brown. Health and age are concerns for Palmer, who has twice torn his ACL. But in Bruce Arians' vertical offense there's no denying that there's considerable fantasy upside present as well.

If you thought that the DeflateGate brouhaha was finished think again -- as of late May, Brady had indeed decided to appeal the court ruling that would cost him the first four games of 2016. "Our two primary arguments are that the commissioner in the first place conducted an investigation and then the commissioner imposed discipline. Then the commissioner appointed himself as an appellate judge or an arbitrator and then decided something new in the appellate process, abandoning the grounds that were the original basis for the supposed discipline," NFLPA attorney Theodore Olson told ABC News. "That's No. 1, and an appellate judge is supposed to look at the record and make a decision on the basis of what happened before. He departed from what happened before. Secondly, he ignored important provisions of the CBA about discipline that might be imposed for equipment violations. He departed from that completely and went off the track." Blah blah blah legal stuff. Long story short, we have no idea if Brady, a top-5 fantasy QB last year, will be on the field Week 1. Stay tuned.

The fringe of the 2016 top-12 fantasy quarterbacks is a who's who of the thirty-something set. That includes Manning, who topped 4,400 passing yards for the second straight season with Ben McAdoo running the offense in 2015. McAdoo is now the head coach, and Manning told Steve Serby of The New York Post he expects that to mean big things in 2016. "I think we're close. I think we have some pieces in place that I'm excited about. I know we always need some new people, some areas where we need some help. I think the Giants are always committed to doing whatever it takes to get the right people and to get back to winning games and making playoffs and having that championship-caliber squad. I think Coach McAdoo will do a great job." Of course, fantasy owners are more worried about the job Manning will do this season. The two-time Super Bowl MVP finished seventh in fantasy points in NFL.com default scoring last year. A similar finish would make him a nice value for fantasy owners who like to wait at the position on draft day.

Last year's 4-12 Chargers team was, from a won-loss standpoint, the worst of Rivers' long NFL career. The 34-year-old told the team's website, however, that 2016 brings with it a clean slate. "There are obviously some new guys we signed in free agency, some guys we were able to retain and guys who were already under contract who are back. But (this is) really when it starts," Rivers said. "Yeah, we are going to lift, run and do all those things that you do. Different exercises and things you do to prevent injuries. But really, it's the time that you start to become a team. You start to develop that camaraderie, that trust and that love for one another. I think this is when it really starts; when you spend that time together in the weight room and running those sprints." Rivers got some new weapons in free agent wideout Travis Benjamin and rookie tight end Hunter Henry, and even in last year's nightmare campaign he finished the season ranked as low-end QB1. It won't take much of a bump to send him back into the top 10.

Raise your hand if you predicted heading into the 2015 season that Bortles would finish second in the National Football League with 35 touchdown passes. Now put your hand down you dirty, dirty liar. Jacksonville offensive coordinator Greg Olson told Ryan O' Halloran of the Florida Times-Union that Bortles is chomping at the bit to show that last season's statistical explosion was no fluke. "He's put in a lot of work this offseason," Olson said. "Knowing the offense he will be running is helpful because he could jump into it right away on his own whereas last year, he was waiting for us to give it to him and we couldn't do that until [late April]." In Allen Robinson and Allen Hurns, Bortles has one of the better one-two punches at wide receiver in the league. But the Jaguars have also made it clear that the team is searching for more balance offensively in 2016. Last year's 4,400+ passing yards and top-5 fantasy finish are all but certainly Bortles' ceiling. Don't overpay chasing last year's numbers.

Down the fantasy stretch (from Week 12 to Week 16) in 2015 there weren't many quarterbacks more valuable than Cousins. In fact, there were exactly three. Russell Wilson of the Seahawks, Cam Newton of the Panthers, and (believe it or not) Blake Bortles of the Jaguars. Over that five-game span Cousins was as good as any quarterback in the NFL, tossing 11 touchdowns versus just one interception while positing a triple-digit passer rating in all five games. Former Redskins great Mark Rypien told the Washington Post he sees no reason why Cousins can't have similar success in 2016. "I watched the transformation of a quarterback not only from a confidence standpoint," Rypien said, "just from a take charge and 'I'm gonna make plays and this is my team' [standpoint]. [He showed] all the things you need and you want from a guy that is looking to be a leader of this great franchise," The weapons are there. The fantasy value will be there as well if Cousins can keep it up in 2016.

The Raiders are a young team on the rise, in no small part because of their third-year quarterback. The 25-year-old increased his level of play across the board in 2015, completing over 60 percent of his passes, throwing for nearly 4,000 yards and tossing 32 touchdown passes while bumping his passer rating nearly 15 points relative to his rookie year. As CSN Bay Area reported, it was a performance that earned the praise of Denver Broncos linebacker Von Miller. "I'll tell ya what, I like Derek Carr," Miller said. "He's one of my favorite quarterbacks, and I like everything about him. He came in for the Raiders and they were super terrible," Miller added. "And he really carried his team, and I applaud him for that." In running back Latavius Murray and wideouts Amari Cooper and Michael Crabtree, Carr has just the sort of young talent around him that fantasy owners search for. If his upward trajectory continues in Year 3 there's a very real chance for Carr to emerge as a viable weekly fantasy starter in 2016.

The Cowboys were a 4-12 Dumpster fire of a football team in 2015, mostly because they lost their starting quarterback to a broken collarbone. Twice. In the same season. However, despite those injuries. ...and the bad back. ...and the ever-increasing number of candles on his birthday cake, Dallas tight end Jason Witten expects Romo to bounce back in 2016. "He's in a position that he's constantly pushing himself," Witten told ESPN's Todd Archer at OTAs, "evaluating it and trying to give himself an edge. He does that better than anybody, and that trickled down within the organization. When the quarterback takes that approach, every one of us should do the same thing." The good news? Romo hasn't shown any real decline in his level of play when healthy, and he has both the league's best offensive line and an all-world wideout in Dez Bryant at his disposal. The bad news? Can you really count on a fragile 36-year-old quarterback to stay healthy? The short answer to that question is "no," relegating Romo to fantasy reserve status for the upcoming season.

The Red Rifle was holstered late in the 2015 season by a broken trigger, but Dalton told Jay Morrison of the Dayton Daily News at OTAs that the broken thumb is A-OK. "It's exciting," Dalton said. "I've been throwing for a while now, so I kind of know how it feels. But it's good to be back out there and not have any concerns with it." Star wide receiver A.J. Green concurred that it was exciting to have Dalton back in the fold. "It felt good to get back out there and run up under some balls with somebody on your back," Green said. "It's good to have him back. The season he was having last year was unbelievable, and then to see him go down really hurt." OK, so Winston's Pro Bowl nod last year comes with a big ol' asterisk -- several players had to decline invitations before his rookie year could finish in Hawaii. However, that didn't stop NFL.com's Ike Taylor from talking up Winston's future. "Winston is the face of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers," Taylor said, "and the organization is going to surround him with the necessary pieces for him to succeed. He's already a natural-born leader, which we saw last season. A lot of people didn't think Winston was going to be as successful as he was in 2015. He works hard and has maturity, and he's only going to go up from here." The No. 1 pick in the 2015 NFL draft has a young go-to wideout in Mike Evans, a solid run game led by Doug Martin and Charles Sims, and the ability to extend plays with his athleticism. Winston's 14th-place fantasy finish in NFL.com default scoring in 2015 isn't jaw-dropping by any stretch, but the youngster is already a serviceable platoon option at quarterback whose value gets a sizable bump in dynasty formats.

It wasn't that long ago that Ryan was considered one of the NFL's top young quarterbacks. However, where players like Aaron Rodgers of the Green Bay Packers have flourished, Ryan has flatlined, culminating in last year's 21-turnover season. However, Patrick Thorman of Pro Football Focus believes things aren't as bad as they appear with the 31-year-old. "Not only did Ryan's PFF QBR rank 10 places higher than his NFL passer rating," Thorman said, "but his passing-game grade placed seventh out of 37 qualifiers and was his highest mark since 2012. Ryan's yards-per-attempt average of 7.5 was in line with a career 7.2 mark and was 12th-best of 42 passers with at least 100 attempts. Where he really fell off, and what kept him out of fantasy QB1 territory for the first time since 2009, was his touchdown rate (3.4). It sunk his career mark to 4.5, and he can thank a mostly pathetic supporting cast." Ryan's days as a weekly fantasy starter may be done (for now), but he has the potential to emerge as one again -- at a backup's price tag.

After an up-and-down rookie season, some might think Mariota would be anxious heading into his second campaign. However, the 2014 Heisman Trophy winner told ESPN's Paul Kuharsky nothing could be farther from the truth. "Coming out here for the second year, it's a lot more comfortable just because it's all a familiar setting," Mariota said. "Last season was brand new -- brand new city, brand new team. After being in it for a year, it's nice to be comfortable. You go through a whole year, you experience a lot of different things, so you know a lot more," Mariota said. "From that standpoint, I feel like I can help these guys out, especially the young guys coming up. From that standpoint, I can help with knowledge." The addition of running backs DeMarco Murray and Derrick Henry adds confidence to the notion of an improved Titans' offense in 2016, and Mariota's ability to gash defenses on the ground helps his fantasy prospects. But the Tennessee receiving corps remains an upside-limiting work in progress, and ultimately relegates Mariota to high-end backup status.

Taylor made the most his starting opportunity in Buffalo in 2015, passing for over 3,000 yards, running for over 550 more and putting up 24 total touchdowns. Now, not only is the 26-year-old the Bills' unquestioned starter, but he's entering a contract year as well. In the opinion of former NFL MVP Rich Gannon (per Tyler Dunne of The Buffalo News), if Taylor wants that big payday he's going to have to grab the bull (and the team) by the horns. "I think his temperament has to change at some point," Gannon said. "As you earn more stripes and it becomes your team, then I think you can be more demanding of the players around you and that huddle. All the great ones have the ability to put their foot down. They have the ability to make the corrections on the field, as opposed to Monday in the film room. And they're very demanding." Much like Matt Ryan, Matthew Stafford is a quarterback at a crossroads -- still very much in the prime of his career, but facing doubters who wonder aloud whether the 28-year-old (yes, despite being in the league seven years Stafford's still only 28) will ever lead the Lions anywhere near the promised land. Toss in the retirement of wide receiver Calvin Johnson, and plenty of pundits are chucking dirt on Stafford's value as a fantasy asset in 2016. Joe Redemann of numberFire isn't hearing it. "This is becoming a versatile and dangerous offense, and its success late in 2015 was no fluke," he said. "Around this time last year, even I wasn't sure that Stafford was a fantasy asset, but the sustainability of the offensive revolution in Detroit makes a compelling argument for him in 2016, and at the very least, Megatron's absence won't slow him." Even if you have zero confidence in Stafford's ability to lead your fantasy team, it's hard to argue his worth as bench depth or a bye-week fill-in.

When Adam Gase became the OC for the Bears before the 2015 season, the focus was on what he'd be able to do with Jay Cutler. Now we'll all find out if Gase can maximize the abilities of Tannehill, who finished the 2015 season hitting 61.9 percent of his passes for an 88.7 passer rating. While he was ninth in the NFL in passing yards, 21st in completion percent, 15th in touchdowns, tied for 12th in most interceptions, and 21st in passer rating, Tannehill was among the worst quarterbacks in the AFC on both third down and in fourth quarters. Pass protection has been an issue. Tannehill after he took 184 sacks during his first four years on the job. The 2015 season was a nightmare for both the Ravens and Flacco, who tore his ACL near the end of November. Still rehabbing from the injury, Flacco is the only starting quarterback in the NFL who won't be on the field in OTAs, but he insisted to ESPN's Jamison Hensley his absence from early workouts is no cause for concern. "At the end of the day, training camp is going to be enough time," Flacco said. "I'm pretty sure I'm not going to get a ton of time before that. So that's going to be enough time. You'd like to get as much as you can, but that'll be plenty to get going." Of course, even if Flacco was available for OTAs, there are still any number of other issues impacting his value. The Ravens' receiving corps is a menagerie of over-the-hills (Steve Smith), has-beens (Mike Wallace), and never-weres (Breshad Perriman). There's also the fact that on his best day Flacco has never been more than a so-so fantasy quarterback. You can do worse as a backup under center on draft day -- but you can do better too.

There hasn't been a quarterback in recent memory who has engendered more animosity from fantasy owners than Cutler. Some of it has been deserved. But, from an NFL perspective at least, Cutler quietly had one of his better seasons in 2015. In fact, his 92.3 passer rating was a career best. T.J. Tedeschi of isportsweb.com thinks even bigger and better days could be in store this year. "Cutler has always had the natural tools of a strong arm and great athleticism," Tedeschi wrote, "and seems to have mostly cut the absurd amount of interceptions out of his game. The Bears have more offensive skill talent, especially at the receiver position, than most teams in the league. Cutler has the opportunity to become an All-Pro quarterback in 2016." The addition of wideout Kevin White, who missed his entire rookie season with an injured shin, can only help. Bear this in mind, however: For as good as Cutler was NFL-wise, he placed a moribund 20th among quarterbacks in NFL.com fantasy scoring. There just isn't a ton of upside to be had here.

OK, so if you want to be picky, Fitzpatrick technically isn't on the Jets' roster. In fact, it's possible that he won't be there in Week 1, despite setting career highs in passing yards and touchdowns on the way to winning 10 games for Gang Green in 2015. However, Fitzpatrick told SiriusXM Radio he'd like to go back to the team this year -- if the money's right. "It was probably my best season last year in terms of how much fun I had with the guys, out there every Sunday," he said. "It's something I still really enjoy doing, it's something I want to continue to do. I'm playing. I'm playing football next year. I would like to be back (in New York)." His beard was unavailable for comment. Contract impasse aside, there's little chance we make it all the way through the summer without the 33-year-old coming to terms with the Jets. And assuming that's the case, early drafters willing to roll the dice will be able to get fantasy football's 11th-ranked quarterback a year ago at a DEEP discount.

As Joel Thorman of SB Nation reported, Smith said the Chiefs spent the offseason looking at ways to extend the momentum from last year's season-closing 11-game winning streak into 2016. "For sure, especially with Coach Reid, nothing's chiseled in rock," Smith said. "We are constantly changing and constantly trying to get better. He grinds over using the talent we have and how can we make it better and put guys in good situations and take advantage of strengths. We're always changing. I think they spent a lot of time after the season looking back at the entire collection of last season, all the snaps and really, what is our identity, where do we need to go from here, what are we good at, what do we need to maybe kick out of the offense, what do we need to add on, build on, things like that. I feel like it's constantly changing." That may be, but the Chiefs are who they are and Smith is who he is -- a low-ceiling, high-floor fantasy backup.

Just how desperate are NFL teams who don't have a franchise quarterback to get one? Well, the Texans just handed Osweiler a four-year, $72 million contract after seven career starts. Seven starts that, on paper at least, look a lot like the first seven starts of Brian Hoyer -- the quarterback the Texans just voted off the island. After finally getting a chance to work with his new quarterback in OTAs, star wideout DeAndre Hopkins told Austin Knoblauch of NFL.com he likes what he's seen from Osweiler so far. "He operates like a pro's pro," Hopkins said about Osweiler. "He comes out and he demands the best out of everybody, offensive line, fullbacks, even the guys that aren't even in the huddle. He's a natural leader." The Texans also invested heavily in the passing game in the 2016 NFL draft, using two of their first three picks to select Notre Dame's Will Fuller and Ohio State's Braxton Miller. There's a chance Osweiler could defy expectations, but the player we saw last year in Denver didn't look much like the second coming of Aaron Rodgers.

Per ESPN's Ben Goessling, there's no doubt what the biggest question surrounding the Minnesota Vikings in 2016 is: Will Teddy Bridgewater take the next step from game manager to franchise quarterback? "The question was repeated so often during Bridgewater's rookie season that it's almost become a meme among Vikings fans," Goessling said, "but it's an important one in 2016. The Vikings focused on fixing their offensive line in free agency, with a set of moves they believe will make things cleaner for Bridgewater, and they hope (Laquon) Treadwell can be the kind of go-to target Bridgewater hasn't had in two years. But they also have talked repeatedly about Bridgewater needing to play with more assertiveness, and if 2015's obstacles have been reduced to speed bumps at the most, it's on Bridgewater to take the next step." It's an important question to be sure, but there's an even bigger one for fantasy owners on draft day. Just how much can you reasonably expect from the quarterback of a run-first team whose number of career seasons with 15 or more passing touchdowns presently sits at zero?

Remember back when Robert Griffin was a good NFL quarterback -- the mobile young threat who took the NFL by storm en route to winning Offensive Rookie of the Year honors back in 2012? Well, Griffin's former head coach Mike Shanahan does -- in fact, Skeletor told Jason Reid of The Undefeated he thinks Griffin can go back to the future in Cleveland. "Look, Robert is the only quarterback I've been around who you just couldn't play certain defenses against," the two-time Super Bowl winner said. "And I was very honest when I (said) that if Robert was willing to go back to some of the things we did [in 2012], I really believe he can get it going again. You just don't find guys who can do the things he did. The problem was, we just couldn't get him to protect himself." Browns head coach Hue Jackson has had success as a quarterback whisperer of sorts in Oakland and Cincinnati, and if Griffin's healthy he's likely to be the Browns' starter. The problem? It's the Browns -- so he's doomed.

Goff will all but certainly be thrown into the fire as the first starting quarterback of the new-look LA Rams, and Mike Mayock of the NFL Network opined that there's a lot to like about the 6'4", 215-pound former Cal standout. "He fits what they do," Mayock said. "He can play on Day 1. The Rams have a strong running game and stout defense. That minimizes what he has to think about. Goff has a very quick release and gets the ball out of his hands quickly. He has innate pocket awareness, which is so critical at the NFL level." What Goff doesn't do, however, is fit into the plans of re-draft owners in 2016. It isn't that the NFL's No. 1 overall draft pick lacks talent. It's more a matter of a Rams team built to run the ball, a lack of receiving targets, and the learning curve that makes it unlikely Goff will make a big Year 1 dent. The future may be bright, but the present ain't so shiny.

ADP

We have added a new piece of information to our player rankings this year -- the Average Draft Position (ADP). The ADP, which is included with the ranking -- separated by a colon -- represents an average of several recent drafts from around the country. The representation we are using here is by position. You can also convert the ADP to an overall draft position such as 12.07 (12th round - seventh pick). The ADP gives you a feel for where a player is going around the country, allowing you to adjust your draft selection in order to acquire the best players possible. If the CheatSheets magazine ranks a player as the 14th best QB and his ADP is 21, then you may want to wait until a few more QBs are taken before selecting him.

Team Target (TM TRG) is the percentage of pass plays in which an offense "targets" the player in question. This stat can be very telling -- adding a unique perspective on draft day. Percentage Caught (% CHT) further enhances the Team Target stat by providing the number of times each player came through with a reception when targeted.

Bell was fantasy football's top running back two years ago and appeared well on his way to a similar finish in 2015. But for the second straight year a knee injury ended Bell's season -- this time after only six games. That's garnered the 24-year-old the dreaded "injury-prone" label from some -- a label Bell told ESPN's Jeremy Fowler he's eager to dispel in 2016. "My luck hopefully should change this year, and I'm on the field, and there's nothing freaky," Bell said. "Obviously, just take care of my body and do the little things right. I'm out here with no knee brace on or anything, didn't wear a knee sleeve or anything. I've been training my knee for everything I'm about to go through, so when September gets here I'll be even better than I am now," Bell said. "That's even crazy to think about. But I'm excited." Fantasy owners are excited about Bell's sky-high upside too. But there's no denying that among the so-called "elite" fantasy backs, Bell carries the highest amount of risk.

In a recent poll at NFL.com regarding who will lead the NFL in rushing in 2016, former Seattle Seahawks fullback Michael Robinson tabbed the second-year Rams' runner. "He has 'get out of here' speed," Robinson wrote. "There aren't many backs in this league who have track speed, can fit into small spaces and pull away, and have the unique ability to make people miss -- all the traits that AP has, as well. Gurley is a volume back -- we don't see volume backs that often because there are more RB committees in college -- and he gets stronger as the game progresses. As a rookie last year, despite playing in just 13 games after rehabbing his injured knee, Gurley was still the third-best rusher in the NFL. Nearly two years removed from his knee injury, Gurley should be more comfortable and feel even better physically." Add in that the Rams have a rookie quarterback and one of the better offensive lines in football per Football Outsiders, and all the ingredients are there for a huge Year 2.

Brad Evans of Yahoo Sports is beating the drum for Johnson big-time this summer. As in "Johnson should be the first running back drafted and No. 1 overall pick" beating the drum. "Three-down workhorses in this timeshare age are a rarity," Evans opined. "On draft day, while everyone else is zigging (drafting WRs or Gronk), riverboat gamblers should zag (go RB). After all, no two years in the NFL are ever the same. Last year's anomalous bust rate is unlikely to be duplicated. Keep in mind from 2009-2014, RBs fell short of expectations at a 43.1 percent clip. A regression to the mean is entirely probable. And Johnson will be one reason why. Bell (knee injury recovery), Gurley (bad line, Jared Goff) and Peterson (advanced age, gross passing offense) are greater risks. If he flirts with 2,000 combined yards and 15 total touchdowns it would be no shocker special." Johnson's relatively small sample size from a year ago is a slight concern, but his fantasy upside as the lead back for a potent Arizona offense can't be denied.

It's been a tumultuous few years for Peterson. He nearly broke the single-season rushing record in 2013, only to lose the entire 2014 campaign amid a child abuse scandal. Peterson was back at it in 2015, pacing the NFL with 1,485 yards on the ground. Still, despite being 31 years old and having over 2,300 career carries under his belt, "All Day" insisted to the Dubuque Telegraph-Herald that he still has room to grow in the NFL. "You know I always try to come back and do better than what I did the previous offseason, and there was a lot of things that I was able to take back from last offseason that opened my eyes," Peterson said. "This year it might be the little things, but I'm that much more focused." Make no mistake, at his age, and with that many career totes on his tires, we've hit the point with Peterson where the edge of the cliff could come at any time. Of course, Peterson's made a living of defying expectations, too. Something has to give.

5:4) Ezekiel ELLIOTT — DAL

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 20 | Ht: 6-0 | Wt: 225 | BYE: 7

So much for the running back position being devalued in the NFL draft. One year after the Rams took Gurley at No. 10 overall the Cowboys went one better, selecting Elliott at No. 4. And despite the presence of Darren McFadden and Alfred Morris, ESPN's Todd Archer expects Elliott to receive a heavy workload as a rookie. "In his first year with the Cowboys," Archer said, "Scott Linehan had DeMarco Murray run the ball on 392 of the 472 carries by running backs in 2014. Last season Darren McFadden had 239 of the 367 carries by running backs, and he didn't become the lead runner until the sixth week of the season. The Cowboys will talk about wanting to use multiple backs, but I think they will settle on a lead back, and it will be Ezekiel Elliott. Do I think the carries will go to the extreme, like 2014? No, but I'm not sure we'll see McFadden or Alfred Morris reach 100 carries on the season if Elliott plays the way the Cowboys hope he will." If that's the case, behind that line. ...look out.

6:6) Lamar MILLER — HOU

2016 will be a year of change for Miller. He was born in Miami. Played collegiately at Miami. And, until this spring, played professionally in Miami. However, after inking a fat free agent deal with the Texans Miller is now in Houston, where he told the team's website he's settling right in. "It's something that I have to get used to," Miller said. "You know, I've been in Miami for 24 years. Just being here on my own without my parents around, it's different but at the same time I'm happy about it because I get a new experience. I'm just trying to cherish the moment and just trying to get used to my teammates and used to the city." It happened without a ton of fanfare, but last season Miller was a top-10 fantasy asset in PPR formats, racking up over 1,200 total yards, averaging 4.5 yards a carry and scoring double-digit touchdowns. It's a relatively safe bet that Miller will set a career high in touches in 2016 with his new team. If he's anywhere near as effective on a per-touch basis, it's gonna be a big year.

7:8) Jamaal CHARLES — KAN

Exp. 9th year | Age: 29 | Ht: 5-11 | Wt: 200 | BYE: 5

It's fair to call the 2016 season a crossroads for Charles. At 29 he's at the age where many backs start to decline. For the second time he's returning from a torn ACL. However, Charles insisted to Chris O' Connell of Sports Illustrated that he isn't ready to be put out to pasture just yet. "One more shot," he said. "When I leave I want to be known as Jamaal Charles, phenomenal football player, inspiring to kids and adults. I'm going to take advantage of this one more shot." In Spencer Ware and Charcandrick West, the Chiefs have a pair of talented young backs who could help ease the workload for (and siphon touches from) Charles. And there's no denying that Charles is closer to the end of his fantasy relevance than the beginning. Still, reports regarding Charles' rehab have been almost universally positive, and he's already shown the ability to come back strong from an ACL tear and post elite fantasy production. This isn't to say there's no risk involved in selecting the ninth-year veteran. But there could be big-time reward as well.

Raise your hand if you thought Freeman would be fantasy football's top running back in 2015, piling up over 1,600 total yards and scoring 14 times for the Falcons. Now put your freaking hand down -- even Freeman's mother didn't see his breakout season coming. Some believe that big year will be hard to back up, but Dave Holcomb of Today's Pigskin thinks Freeman may even be able to better some of last year's stats. "Accumulating 1,600 yards is difficult for any running back," Holcomb said, "but if anyone has the tools and ability to do it, it's Freeman. He finished fourth in rushing attempts and second among running backs in receiving targets. Owners should love both of those facts. Freeman, though, was 32nd with a 4.0 yards per carry average. If Atlanta's offense is clicking, it isn't out of the question to see him improve that average with nearly the same amount of attempts. That would lead to a really huge fantasy season." At the very least, Freeman remains safely inside fantasy RB1 territory and a solid target at the end of Round 1.

After two injury-marred seasons, Martin finally returned to the form that saw him take the league by storm his rookie season, finishing second in the league in rushing in 2015 (behind Adrian Peterson). That big season got Martin a big contract, a contract that James Yarcho of FanSided expects Martin to justify in 2016. "Doug Martin has earned, and will continue to earn every penny he gets from this contract," Yarcho said. "Yes, you pay free agents for what they're going to do, not what they've already done. Given the year Martin had under Dirk Koetter and having a second year in the system along with a reliable quarterback entering his second career season, there is no reason to think Doug Martin can't play to the same, or even a higher level in 2016 and beyond." Charles Sims is still there to poach a few touches, but as long as he stays healthy there's no reason to think Martin won't continue to put up RB1 numbers in an improving Tampa Bay offense.

Jeff Smith of Today's Pigskin wrote that a healthy Ingram could be set for big things in 2016. "Overall," Smith said, "Ingram has all the skills to be one of the most well-rounded and talented backs in the NFL. If not for injuries in the past, as well as a few seasons where he either wasn't the featured back or was splitting carries, he'd be a sure thing to top 1,000 yards and hit double-digit touchdowns on the ground in almost every NFL season." Of course, if frogs had wings they wouldn't bump their butts when they hop -- Ingram has played in 16 games all of once. ...back in 2012. With that said though, Ingram has topped 1,000 total yards each of the last two seasons, and last year's RB12 finish was a career best. We're still waiting on that huge season from the former Heisman trophy winner, and we may never see it. But what we have seen the past two campaigns is enough to make Ingram worth a look as a low-end RB1 or high-end second back.

Thanks to four missed games last season, McCoy failed to hit 1,000 yards rushing for the first time since 2012 -- when he also missed a month. The 27-year-old told NFL.com that he realizes he's at the point in his career where just staying on the field can become a bigger challenge than dodging defenders. "Going into my eighth year," McCoy said, "the biggest thing is just taking care of your body, because you want to play a long time in this league, and be productive, so you gotta take care of your body. I think it's the small things you take for granted being young -- but as you get older, it wears on you. Hamstrings, knees, and things I've never hurt or felt before. I got hurt a lot (in 2015)." When he was on the field, it was a bit of a mixed bag for McCoy. His 4.4 yards per carry was the third-highest total of his career, but he managed just the second-fewest (32) receptions. Still, we know the Bills are going to run the ball early and often.

Lacy's 2015 season was a big fat ball of disappointment. With "big" and "fat" being the operative words, as a clearly-overweight Lacy lumbered his way to a career-low 758 yards on the ground. In fact, as Pete Dougherty of USA Today wrote, Green Bay head coach Mike McCarthy still isn't crazy about Lacy's weight, although it's headed in the right direction. "Eddie's like a lot of our team right now," McCarthy said when asked of Lacy's conditioning. "We've got a lot of work to do. Eddie will be fine. I believe he'll hit the target that we're all looking for when the lights come on." Lacy admitted that last year's struggles weren't acceptable. "You get a wake-up call," he said, "(last season) was my wake-up call. Better sooner than later." The Packers floundered offensively as a team last year, in no small part because of an inability to run the ball effectively. Assuming that Lacy gets his weight down and keeps it down, a bounce-back season for both player and team isn't hard to envision.

After eight years, 8,602 rushing yards and two Pro Bowls, Forte took his talents east, inking a free agent deal to replace Chris Ivory as the lead back for Gang Green. Forte told Steve Serby of the New York Post he hopes to emulate former Jets tailback Curtis Martin -- by leading the NFL in rushing despite being over 30 years old. "I liked his running style," Forte said. "He was a very patient runner. He let the blocking work for him, and then didn't get too anxious about hitting the hole. I think at 30 or 31, he actually won the rushing title [at 31 in 2004], so that's definitely one of my goals to follow in his footsteps like that, and be a running back for the Jets just as he was." Leading the NFL in rushing would be quite the accomplishment for a tailback who posted fewer than 900 yards on the ground last year, but keep this in mind: the next time Forte fails to gain 1,200 total yards in a season will be the first.

The Denver backfield was a revolving door last year, but despite the continued presence of Ronnie Hillman and the addition of rookie Devontae Booker, Anderson told CBS Denver he has every intention of making the Broncos look good for matching the four-year offer sheet he signed with the Miami Dolphins. "It's going to be fun," Anderson said. "It's going to be a fun backfield. It's always fun to have competition." Head coach Gary Kubiak sounded pleased that each of his tailbacks hoped to stake a claim to top dog status. "I would hope they're all here that way," Kubiak said. "They have confidence in what they're doing. We got some new guys that can help our team and help us quick. But like I told them after practice, they got to prove to the team they can help them. I love confidence, but you got to back up confidence with work." A crowded backfield can mean fantasy headaches, but the Broncos have $18 million reasons to give Anderson the first crack. The rest will be up to him.

Lewis' 2015 breakout season came to an unceremonious end courtesy of a torn ACL. Lewis isn't all the way back quite yet, but as former Pats standout Kevin Faulk told Phil Perry of Comcast Sports Net New England, Lewis is getting close. "I think he's done a lot of great things already this offseason to get his health back to the form where he knows he can perform at the NFL level," Faulk said. "But he's an outstanding kid when you talk to him and understand who he is and where he's come from. You understand that he still has a lot to offer on the table." And if Lewis is all-systems-go by Week 1, there's a lot to like about him as a fantasy RB2. For starters, Lewis ranked seventh in fantasy points per game over the first six weeks of last season. There's also the looming four-game suspension for Tom Brady that could mean more early-season reliance on the run game in Beantown. Add them together and you get a tailback with a real chance of outplaying his draft slot.

As with just about everything in San Francisco last year, Hyde was a mess. He missed over half the season, wasn't himself when he was on the field and failed to crack 500 yards on the ground while barely averaging 4.1 yards a carry. However, new Niners head coach Chip Kelly told KNBR radio he sees a big 2016 coming for the former Ohio State star. "Carlos is a stud," Kelly said. "He's been full-go since we started in the beginning of April. Participated in everything. And he's as advertised. To have someone that size that is that agile, has that vision, it's really impressive to see him work every day. There have been no restrictions on him at all. He's full clear, 100 percent, and he's going. He's really good, we're really excited about him." There are plenty of reasons to be nervous about Hyde, who has never carried the ball even 150 times in a season. But Kelly's offense is predicated on the run -- and as long as Hyde stays healthy the touches are going to be there.

Murray went over the 1,000-yard mark in his third NFL season, but he told Paul Gutierrez that he's only getting started. "Going into my fourth season, coming off of last year where I was a full-time starter, I'm definitely more confident," he said. "I still have a lot to prove and a lot that I want to improve on as far as my game. Looking forward to it. I think now it's a matter of really learning the playbook inside and out, knowing it like the back of my hand so I can play a lot faster. Any time you're out there thinking, you play slow or you're not confident. So me knowing it now, going into my second year (as the starter), I think I can do a lot more. I feel a lot more confident." The Raiders added to an already deep backfield with the selection of rookie DeAndre Washington, but make no mistake -- it's Murray's show. And as the lead back for an up-and-coming Raiders team, there's fantasy hay to be made.

Cole Weinstein of Page 2 Sports recently made a bold proclamation -- given the choice between Rawls and Arizona's David Johnson, his money would be on the Seahawks' surprise star. "Rawls had 830 rushing yards off of 147 attempts which averages out to an astounding 5.6 yards a carry," Weinstein said. "On the other hand, David Johnson ran for 581 yards on 125 attempts with 4.6 yards per carry. It's safe to assume that Johnson's stats would not look even this good if the Cardinals didn't have the fourth best run-blocking offensive line compared to the Seahawks' 29th ranked (according to Pro Football Focus). So not only was Rawls able to hold a far higher rushing average on more attempts, it was with a far worse offensive line." Yes, the Seahawks drafted a pair of running backs, and Rawls suffered a fairly serious ankle injury last year. But he's expected to be ready for Week 1, and head coach Pete Carroll made it clear he views Rawls as Seattle's lead back. If you like your RB with an extra-large helping of risk/reward, Rawls is your guy.

A year ago pundits around the NFL shook their heads when the Eagles added Mathews despite having just signed DeMarco Murray. One year later Mathews is the last man standing after the Eagles dealt Murray to the Tennessee Titans. And in the opinion of Yahoo's Brad Evans, that means value where Mathews is concerned for fantasy owners in 2016. "With only rookie Wendell Smallwood as his direct competition," Evans said, "he's destined to entrench himself as the Eagles' early-down and goal-line rusher. Remember last year under Chip Kelly's direction, he was a productive complementary option to DeMarco Murray. Among rushers with at least 90 touches, he ranked fourth in standard fantasy points per opportunity. Additionally, his 2.7 yards after contact was equal to David Johnson and Lamar Miller." Now, Mathews has had some trouble staying healthy in the past, but provided the seventh-year veteran can stay on the field he's a good bet to outplay this draft slot. In fact, it wouldn't be a huge shock if he did so significantly. If you wait to target a RB2, keep Mathews in mind.

Remember how DeMarco Murray led the National Football League with over 1,800 yards on his way to winning Offensive Player of the Year honors in 2014? Given how he played last year for the Eagles, it's rather hard to believe it ever happened. Murray's out to show that last year's struggles were the aberration, and Tennessee head coach Mike Mularkey told the Tennessean he's already seeing flashes of the old Murray in practice. "I certainly liked some of the cuts I saw," Mularkey said. "Even without pads on, those were cuts he wasn't going to get touched on. It was going to be an explosive run. You can tell when a play is going to work and not work. He's got very good vision and very good feet. And a lot of the things we're doing, he's run before, so it's not new to him." The problem with those glowing reviews is that they fail to mention the second-round selection of Alabama tailback Derrick Henry, a surprising move that sapped some of Murray's fantasy upside.

21:21) Danny WOODHEAD — SDG

How you feel about Woodhead is probably tied quite a bit to one important fact about the scoring in your fantasy football league -- whether your league awards a point for receptions or not. In that format in 2015, only Devonta Freeman of the Falcons and Adrian Peterson of the Vikings scored more fantasy points. The thing is, though, even in standard scoring formats last season Woodhead ranked 12th thanks to almost 1,100 total yards and nine scores. As head coach Mike McCoy told the team's website, Woodhead's big year was a bright spot in a dark season. "Amazing," McCoy said. "(He) never shocks you, right? Phenomenal. He is a playmaker and we are very fortunate to have him here." Now, it may be asking a lot for the 31-year-old Woodhead to once again post RB1 numbers across all scoring systems in 2016. What wouldn't be a huge stretch though is a top-20 season, which would make him a nice value for fantasy owners wise enough to understand that not all running backs make their money running the ball.

In news that some took as a sign of the Apocalypse, Stewart stayed relatively healthy during the Panthers' Super Bowl run last year. His 989 rushing yards and six scores were his highest totals since his lone 1,000-yard season back in 2009. Stewart also posted top-20 fantasy numbers at his position in standard scoring leagues. Per Marc Sessler of NFL.com, Stewart also got his first career spot on the "Top 100" list. "At No. 86, Jonathan Stewart finally made the top 100 after eight NFL seasons," Sessler said. "The late-career love has plenty to do with Carolina's stellar campaign, but Stewart's resume over the past season-plus speaks for itself. He was one of the league's hardest runners at the end of 2014 and continued to shine for much of last year." There's a catch, of course -- by "relatively healthy" we mean just that, as Stewart missed the last three games of the season. That included the fantasy playoffs, for those keeping track. Know before you select him that Stewart's availability always seems to be up in the air.

When Lamar Miller left the Dolphins in free agency the belief was Miami would lead the group of teams looking for a running back in the draft. And the 'Fins did add one in Round 3. However, youngster Kenyan Drake is a third-down, scat-back type. And that means as things stand today, the job of lead back for Adam Gase's offense falls to Ajayi. As ESPN's Matthew Berry wrote, fantasy owners need to take note. "It really looked," Berry said, "as if Miami was saying, 'We don't know who our starting running back will be this year, we just know we don't want it to be Jay Ajayi.' And then they went out and drafted Kenyan Drake. Drake, a 6-1, 210-pound speedster, is not a guy who will be an every-down player -- Mel Kiper Jr. and Todd McShay were commenting during ESPN's draft coverage about how he's a specialist and not an every-down back. Ajayi will be the main guy on first and second down and, if he can stay healthy, he'll flirt with top-20 RB numbers."

When Alfred Morris left the team in free agency, the prevailing wisdom was that the Redskins would address the running back position fairly early in the NFL draft. The team didn't add a back until Day 3, however, leaving second-year pro Matt Jones as the no-doubt lead back in 2016. Washington OC Sean McVay told the team's website it's a role he has no doubt Jones will flourish in. "We know that he had some growing pains, but I think, when you look at the things that he was able to do both in the run game, and in the pass game, he's got the skills and the traits that you're looking for in that every-down [running] back, where he can put his foot in the ground," McVay said. "He's a violent finisher. I think he's a little bit more sudden than people give him credit for." Jones had some ball-control issues in 2015, and he's not a can't-miss fantasy monster, but with seventh-round rookie Keith Marshall the only real threat for carries behind him, the touches are going to be there.

At first glance, there might not appear to be anything to worry about with Hill. After all, he's finished as a top-15 fantasy option in standard scoring formats in both of his seasons in the NFL. However, if you actually saw Hill play last year then you know there's much more to the story. After averaging over five yards a carry as a rookie, Hill saw his average drop by a full 1.5 yards in 2015. Ball-control issues got him benched on more than one occasion. Only his 11 rushing touchdowns saved him from joining a long list of season-killers at the position last year. Hill told the Cincinnati Enquirer he's aware this is a make-or-break season. "I embrace it," Hill said. "I embrace the challenge. I embrace the doubters, the negative, all that stuff. It's great. It's part of football. The great competitors, the great athletes all embrace it." If Hill returns to his 2014 form, he could be one of the biggest steals of 2016. If he keeps putting the ball on the ground, however. ...well, that would be ungood.

The new staff in Cleveland has talked Johnson up since the day they arrived. "Duke has suddenness and quickness and he can go catch the ball with anybody," new head coach Hue Jackson told Cleveland.com. "He does so many different things that gives your offense a boost." Those sentiments were echoed by run-game coordinator Kirby Wilson. "He's very comfortable in space, he's got natural ability to catch the football, and he knows how to run routes," said Wilson. "He is what you would call an ultimate weapon for us. He is a running threat, obviously, and he is a pass-receiving threat." Now, Isaiah Crowell is still in Cleveland and looks to handle early-down work out of the gate. But Crowell is also, well, Isaiah Crowell. To be blunt, Johnson is a more talented and explosive player, and it wouldn't be a stunner to see him take the featured back role altogether. Of course, the $64 question is whether that will matter -- a back is only as good as the offense he plays in. And the Browns are not a good football team.

After Jeremy Hill tore up the NFL down the stretch in 2014, the belief was Bernard would be relegated to second-fiddle status in the Bengals' backfield last year. Instead it was Bernard who was the more effective back, topping 1,200 total yards and finishing the season 16th at his position in leagues that award a point for receptions. Dadio McDuck of SB Nation thinks that performance should rate Bernard a bigger piece of the backfield pie in 2016. "Like (Barry) Sanders," he said, "Bernard is an offensive explosion waiting to happen. He has the agility and quickness to juke and then scorch defensive backs. And in the passing game, he's always been a great safety valve for quarterback Andy Dalton, who will be without two of his top three wide receivers from 2015 in 2016." Now, comparing Bernard to Barry Sanders may be a bit, um, excessive. But all Bernard has to really do to justify his ADP is back up last year's production. Which he already sort of did, by finishing the 2014 season ranked -- wait for it -- 16th among running backs.

With Matt Forte now in New York, Langford is the lead back for the Bears entering Year 2 of his NFL career, and he told Adam Jahns of The Chicago Sun-Times he's aware that the pressure will be dialed up in 2016. "This year, it's really just [trying] to become more of a leader at the position, [especially] being a running back in Chicago," Langford said. "[It's] being more of a leader and really just not being that secondary guy. [It's] acting like more of a veteran and [knowing] the whole offense. It's a lot different. It's up to me, how I deal with it. Last year, it was more, 'Let's see what he can do,' and now it's, 'We need you out there to make plays.' " There's also some cause for concern. Langford wasn't especially effective on a per-touch basis, grading out as the NFL's 10th-worst tailback per Pro Football Focus. And with Ka'Deem Carey and rookie Jordan Howard on the roster, Langford's leash may not be especially long. Bear that in mind on draft day.

Yes, at 33 Gore is the RB equivalent of older than dirt. And yes, his age started to show more than ever last season, his first year with the Colts. He failed to hit 1,000 yards rushing for the first time since 2008, and Gore's 3.7 yards per carry was a career low. However, Gore still managed to top 1,200 total yards, scored seven times and was a top-15 fantasy back in leagues that award a point for receptions. A back Gore's age hasn't hit 1,000 rushing yards since 1984, but Gore told ESPN's Mike Wells that's the plan in 2016. "My goal was to come here and be the difference-maker, something they didn't have," said Gore, who rushed for 967 yards last season. "Getting the 100-yard games, getting 1,000 yards. When that didn't happen, that was really, really frustrating." If the old man pulls off the feat he'd be a phenomenal value this late in drafts, but let's be honest -- the chips are stacked against him and then some. There's a reason it hasn't happened in 32 years.

After an uneven rookie season that featured equal parts explosiveness and fumbles, Abdullah enters 2016 with a lot to prove. And back in March, Lions head coach Jim Caldwell told Kyle Meinke of MLive he expects Abdullah to do just that in Year 2. "If there's anybody who is going to improve," Caldwell said, "he's going to improve. I think that he was able to (get a lot better) during the course of the year. He had some peaks and valleys, but obviously, I think he's going to be OK." That was before Abdullah had shoulder surgery in May -- putting his availability for training camp very much in doubt. That leaves fantasy owners with a dilemma. If Abdullah recovers quickly, getting a lead back for a RB3 price tag is the sort of value pick that puts teams on a collision course with the playoffs. Or the shoulder could be a problem all season long and the pick could wind up a total waste. Do you feel lucky? Well, do ya? (Not calling you a punk -- that would just be mean.)

The Chargers made Gordon a first-round pick in 2015, but after an underwhelming rookie season the former Wisconsin star is flying under most fantasy radars. Of course, that may have something to do with the microfracture (insert gasp here) surgery Gordon had in the offseason. However, Gordon insisted to Annie Heilbrunn of Scout that he'll be ready to rock when the season begins. "I'm getting better," Gordon said. "I'm not where I want to be right now, but I think I'm ahead of schedule. I'm sprinting pretty good, cutting. I try to do a little bit more extra every day. The trainers push me to do a little extra every day so I can be ready. ... No question I'll be ready for training camp. I'm not even worried about that." Microfracture isn't the kiss of death it once was for NFL players -- Reggie Bush came back just fine from the procedure -- but until we get a better feel for where Gordon is in his rehab it's hard to advise viewing him as more than a flex or bye-week option.

When the calendar turned to 2016, Yeldon's fantasy arrow was trending up. Yes, his 740 rushing yards and 4.1 yards per carry as a rookie were hardly awe-inspiring numbers, but it looked as though Yeldon would enter Year 2 of his NFL career as a workhorse tailback. That is, until the Jaguars agreed to terms on a free agent deal with Chris Ivory. As ESPN's Mike Clay wrote, the signing knocked some of the shine off both backs. "Yeldon is the incumbent back; he's only 22 years old and played well as a rookie," Clay said. "He's the preferred fantasy back and could separate himself from the 28-year-old Ivory during the 2016 regular season. Although Yeldon's season may get off to a slow start, he's the better bet of the two to emerge as the feature back during the season. Both belong in the flex conversation." Yeldon's also the better receiver of the pair should see third-down work, which will boost his value for PPR owners.

Before Doug Martin re-signed in Tampa, the folks at SB Nation wondered aloud whether Sims -- if called on -- could get the job done as the Bucs' lead back. "In college," they said, "Sims has revealed how highly productive he was as a featured back, but a feature back not in the same mold as Martin, a bell cow. With the new mentality and bulkier body, Sims can be a very productive feature back in Dirk Koetter's offense, receiving more touches in the air than a traditional bell cow. There is only one aspect that Sims has not been in a position to do as a running back. That is to be a short down back." Of course, it's all academic now that Martin's back in town, but there are a couple of things we do know about the 25-year-old Sims. He's already shown to be a capable third-down back who will get some work catching the ball out of the backfield. And he's a fine insurance policy for fantasy teams who invest an early pick in Martin.

Ivory topped 1,000 yards on the ground for the first time in his career in 2015 with the New York Jets, but the 28-year-old faces a very different dynamic now that he's in Jacksonville sharing a backfield with second-year pro T.J. Yeldon. The prevailing wisdom appears to be that Ivory will handle the early-down work, while Yeldon will take the field on third downs. In that case, the deal-breaker may be who gets the short-yardage and goal-line work. On one hand, as Ryan O'Halloran of The Florida Times-Union reported, Jacksonville OC Greg Olson talked up Ivory's toughness. "Anytime you can add an element of toughness to your squad, that's important," Olson said. "He'll be a great fit here." On the other hand, there's Gus Bradley's indication that Yeldon is the starter and the fact that Ivory converted less than half his short-yardage (three yards or less needed) attempts for the Jets in 2015. This situation may clear up as the team heads into camp, but as things stand now Ivory appears to be on the wrong end of a timeshare. Draft accordingly.

Fresh off an 80-catch season, Riddick is rapidly making a name for himself as one of the NFL's better pass-catchers out of the backfield. And with Calvin Johnson no longer on the roster and second-year tailback Ameer Abdullah recovering from shoulder surgery, Scott Bischoff of FanSided thinks Riddick could be in for a big bump in touches as he enters a contract year. "Riddick is a fantastic route runner," he said, "a slasher capable of using his elite lateral quickness to cut on a dime and create instant separation while running his routes. When he catches the ball, he is very likely to make the first man miss and that means yards after the catch. These are all things that will benefit this particular offense needing a playmaker with Johnson retired." In leagues that award a point for receptions, Riddick was already a top-20 fantasy option last year. In leagues that don't? Well, let's put it this way -- Riddick had 37 more catches than carries. That will have to change in a big way for his standard scoring value to get a sizable bump.

As Ryan Talbot of Scout recently pointed out, Maurice Jones-Drew (everyone's favorite fantasy stud turned fantasy pundit) recently named Williams as one of the league's top backups in the backfield after his surprising rookie season. "Despite missing five games," Talbot said, "Williams made a big impact in Buffalo and established himself quickly in the NFL. Williams' first season saw him average 5.6 yards per carry. The back recorded 517 yards and seven touchdowns on just 93 attempts in his rookie season. In four games, Williams averaged nine yards or more with Buffalo and he was a touchdown machine. Williams scored a touchdown in his first six games and finished the year with nine total touchdowns in 11 total games." Those are all numbers that should raise eyebrows for fantasy owners, and over the first 10 weeks of 2015 Williams was a top-15 running back in fantasy points per game. Last year's touchdown total will be very hard to duplicate, portending a precipitous drop unless Williams gets a bump in touches in Year 2.

New Browns head coach Hue Jackson has a long-developed reputation for featuring the run game in his offenses, and Crowell told Mary Kay Cabot of The Northeast Ohio Media Group he can't wait to see how things unfold on the shores of Lake Erie. "I'm very excited about it because I know Hue likes to run the ball, and I feel like running the ball is a very important factor in winning and losing," Crowell said. "I'm just, basically, happy about it. I feel like I missed a lot of opportunities last year, running the ball and pass protection, catching the ball out of the backfield, everything," he said. "I feel like I want to do better in all phases this coming up year." There's certainly room for improvement with Crowell, who averaged only 3.8 yards per carry in 2015 and had only one 100-yard performance on the ground all season long. There's also the presence of passing-down back Duke Johnson to contend with. If Crowell is going to stake a claim to the lion's share of the carries in Cleveland, he's going to have to do it early.

Somewhat surprisingly, the Giants didn't really address their backfield in free agency or the 2016 draft. Yes, they added rookie Paul Perkins on the third day of the draft, but that wasn't a pick that should portend a big shakeup in the pecking order -- and that would mean another season as lead back for Jennings. He told James Kratch of NJ.com that so far as he's concerned the more the merrier. "If you're surprised, ever, no matter what happens in the NFL, then you probably don't understand the NFL," Jennings said. "You need healthy running backs to run the ball. I'm excited to have another young guy to teach and give everything I know, and to groom him into a great running back." Jennings, who topped 1,100 yards for the Giants in 2015, was fantasy football's No. 24 running back in formats that award a point for catches last year. If he can approach those same numbers in 2016 the vet has sneaky value play written all over him.

After the Titans selected the wildly productive 2015 Heisman Trophy winner in Round 2 of April's draft, Mike Mayock of the NFL Network talked up the pick. "Henry has one year of amazing production," Mayock said. "If you draft him, you have to philosophically commit to who this kid is. Titans GM Jon Robinson is trying to build a big, physical team in that division." And the 247-pound bruiser hasn't wasted any time impressing his new teammates, according to ESPN's Paul Kuharsky. "I've been sizing up Derrick Henry," tight end Delanie Walker said. "He's a big dude. I might have to put him in his place early. But he's a good dude, I'm just messing with him, giving him a hard time, because I feel like he's going to be a monster." The problem for fantasy owners is that for now at least, Henry's place is second in the tailback pecking order behind DeMarco Murray. And given that rather large roadblock, Henry's a player who's of much more interest to Dynasty owners than those in re-draft formats.

One of, well, it seems like every Ravens' player got hurt in 2015, Forsett's season was stopped early by a broken arm. The 30-year-old was back on the field at OTAs, now the elder statesman in a Baltimore backfield that includes second-year pro Javorius Allen and rookie fourth-round pick Kenneth Dixon. Forsett told Jake Lourin of The Baltimore Sun he welcomes the competition. "My mindset is, every year, competition," Forsett said. "Competition within, and trying to push myself to get better. That's what I'm doing this year. I'm pretty much trying to work my way back in there. But I'm good to go." The question is how good Forsett really is. Yes, he was outstanding for the Ravens during his first year in Baltimore in 2014, but last year his per-touch numbers were down across the board. From 5.4 yards a carry to 4.2. From six yards a catch to 4.9. It may just be that Forsett is what we thought he is -- an aging journeyman. And if that's the case, his time atop the depth chart will be short-lived.

41:41) Kenneth DIXON — BAL

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 22 | Ht: 5-10 | Wt: 215 | BYE: 8

The Ravens already had veteran Justin Forsett and youngster Buck Allen in their backfield, but that didn't stop the team from adding Dixon in Round 4 of the 2016 NFL draft. In fact, drafting a fourth-round tailback has become somewhat of an annual rite for Ozzie Newsome. It was widely expected that Dixon would be drafted earlier, a fact he told Sean Isabella of the Monroe News-Star he intends to use as motivation during his rookie season. "I'm motivated. Most definitely. Heck ya. I'm always motivated," Dixon said. "Going fourth round, it's just going to make me play with a chip on my shoulders and make me go out and work that much harder. I feel they utilize their running backs very well and I'm excited to be a part of it." Dixon may begin the year behind Forsett and Allen on the depth chart, but that doesn't mean he'll stay there. Forsett is coming off a serious injury, and Allen wasn't especially effective as a rookie. If you want upside in the Baltimore backfield (and can stomach some risk), Dixon's the player to target.

With six starts under his belt and over 500 rushing yards as a rookie, Allen will be very much in the mix to be the team's starting running back in 2016. He told the team's website he's well aware that in a crowded backfield he's going to have to maximize every rep he gets. "You never know when your opportunity is going to come," Allen said. "You just have to take advantage of your opportunities. Of course, you have to get in the playbook and all that, but my biggest thing is take advantage of your opportunity. Make the best of when that opportunity comes. When that time comes, I love competition. I push the guys, and I always want to see them do great. I never talk anybody down. If a person is good and he's got it, I salute him and support him the best." Allen did OK for fantasy owners last year, but for the Ravens, not so much -- 3.8 yards a carry. If he ends up as the Ravens' primary back in 2016, it will likely be because someone got hurt.

There's a great deal of upheaval in the Big Apple at present. A new lead tailback in Matt Forte. An unsettled quarterback situation. And then there's the old (sort of) standby in Powell, who has spent all five of his seasons as the Jets' third-down specialist. Behind Chris Ivory a year ago, that meant a defined role -- which resulted in career highs in receptions and receiving yards. Forte, however, is a very capable receiver (and the team also added Khiry Robinson), which makes it fair to wonder what Todd Bowles has in store for Powell in 2016. As Alex Reimer of SB Nation pointed out, Powell's usage was already trending in the wrong direction. "Powell saw his playing time decrease significantly over the last two years, as Chris Ivory emerged as the Jets' No. 1 running back option," Reimer said. "Ivory rushed for 1,891 yards on 445 attempts since 2014. Powell's only carried the ball 103 times in that time span after recording 176 attempts in 2013." The downward trend is highly unlikely to reverse itself in 2016.

Blount re-signed with the Patriots in April, getting a one-year deal worth up to $2 million. Blount missed the final four games and the playoffs last season with a chipped bone in his hip. The injury didn't require surgery for Blount, who will turn 30 in December. Blount was already at 100 percent at the time he re-signed and was ready for organized team activities. Blount rejoins a backfield that includes Dion Lewis, James White, Donald Brown, Brandon Bolden and Joey Iosefa. The apparent lack of interest in Blount on the free-agent market is somewhat telling, but Blount has always fit in nicely in New England. Last season, he had a 165 carries for 703 yards and six touchdowns. If he can stay on the field, a similar workload can be expected -- although fantasy owners will want to watch how things play out in training camp before investing.

In 2015, Shane Vereen did what Shane Vereen does. Carry the ball a little, and catch the ball a lot. His 61 carries ranked third in his five-year NFL career. But his 59 receptions and 494 receiving yards were both career highs. New head coach Ben McAdoo told the team's website he isn't going to fix what ain't broken in Big Blue's backfield. "Looks a lot, at this point, like we left it last year," he said. "Rashad [Jennings] took the bull by the horns, and that was great to see at the end of the year. Shane was a good addition, played about 38 percent of the snaps, so that part was encouraging. A lot of guys are giving up on Andre [Williams], don't give up on Andre. He's going into his third year and he'll continue to grow. No one is going to outwork him. And then Orleans [Darkwa] is a guy who is a natural runner." You can toss Paul Perkins into that mix -- and pencil Vereen in as a PPR flex option. ...just like last year.

Coleman was the flip side of Devonta Freeman's breakout season, which never would have happened had Coleman not gotten hurt. Nate Butler of SB Nation urged fantasy owners not to forget what a healthy Coleman could bring to the team. "Coleman is a very talented running back who went through some of the growing pains of facing NFL talent in his rookie season," Butler said. "Moving forward, Coleman and starter and Pro Bowler Devonta Freeman could present a lethal one-two punch in Atlanta's backfield next season. Falcons fans, Coleman may not be one of your favorite players at the moment, but with his potential and the benefit of another year in the system, he could be poised to make a positive impact on the Falcons offense." That's all well and good, and to be fair Coleman is a talented young back. But to say Freeman took the ball and ran with it last year is the understatement to end all understatements. As depth or fantasy insurance Coleman is worth a look -- but other than that there isn't much to see here.

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 22 | Ht: 6-1 | Wt: 220 | BYE: 5

The Seahawks went gaga on their ground game in the 2016 NFL draft, including the addition of Prosise, who is a converted wide receiver. Head coach Pete Carroll told ESPN's Sheil Kapadia he hopes Prosise will add an explosive new element to the Seattle offense. "He is a guy that I fell in love with because when I went back and watched him play at receiver, he ran all of the routes," Carroll said. "He was a regular receiver. He had 50 targets or something two years ago. He's a natural football player at that position that became a running back. That's really unusual that happens like that and that he would be so dynamic as a player at the running back spot. So, going into this draft I was hoping that we would get this guy so we could do the things that we can do with him." Carroll got his wish, but coachspeak in May and a real role in October aren't the same thing. That leaves the rookie mainly of interest to fantasy owners in dynasty formats.

ADP

We have added a new piece of information to our player rankings this year -- the Average Draft Position (ADP). The ADP, which is included with the ranking -- separated by a colon -- represents an average of several recent drafts from around the country. The representation we are using here is by position. You can also convert the ADP to an overall draft position such as 12.07 (12th round - seventh pick). The ADP gives you a feel for where a player is going around the country, allowing you to adjust your draft selection in order to acquire the best players possible. If the CheatSheets magazine ranks a player as the 14th best QB and his ADP is 21, then you may want to wait until a few more QBs are taken before selecting him.

Team Target (TM TRG) is the percentage of pass plays in which an offense "targets" the player in question. This stat can be very telling -- adding a unique perspective on draft day. Percentage Caught (% CHT) further enhances the Team Target stat by providing the number of times each player came through with a reception when targeted.

After two straight No. 1 finishes in PPR scoring systems, Brown has cemented his status as the best wide receiver in both the NFL and fantasy football. In fact, Brown is the consensus choice as the top overall pick in fantasy leagues, and with good reason. Over that two-year stretch an average season from the 27-year-old means over 130 receptions, 1,700+ receiving yards and 11-plus touchdowns. And Brown told ESPN's Jeremy Fowler he might be even better in 2016 -- compliments of "Dancing with the Stars." "[Dance training] can definitely help me with football, change of direction, fluidity, constantly being ready for the next move," Brown said. "Dancing is all about the next move, being prepared for the next move in the midst of any move. It will definitely help with ankle strength, pushing off." Given that, and his ridiculous production over the past couple of years, if you're lucky enough to secure the No. 1 pick the safe play is probably to boogie down with Tony Brown. Odds are excellent you won't regret it.

There haven't been many wideouts in NFL history who have inflicted the sort of damage Beckham has over his first two NFL seasons. In each of those years Beckham has eclipsed 90 receptions, posted over 1,300 receiving yards and scored at least a dozen times. As if that wasn't enough reason to draft ODB in 2016, try this on for size -- quarterback Eli Manning told ESPN's Dan Graziano Beckham is only getting started. "It's just good to have him in that third season and healthy and going to all of the OTAs and being able to move him around in different spots," Manning said. "I think now he can handle all of that. We put him in different routes and make sure he's doing them correctly. I think there's an understanding of the offense, how things are supposed to go and the timing of things, and I think that third year, he should start really picking up on that." What does a breakout year look like from a player who has already broken out? We may be about to find out.

For much of last year it appeared that Jones, who led the NFL in both catches and receiving yardage in 2015, was going to make a run at the NFL record books. And believe it or not, his monster season included a career low in yards per reception at 13.8. That may be why Joe Tricarico of isportsweb.com thinks we may see an even better year from Jones in 2016. "This is a revamped Atlanta offense," Tricarico said. "Devonta Freeman took over at running back last season and was the best running back in football once he broke out. Alex Mack, Mohamed Sanu, and Austin Hooper will all be major contributors to the offense. Julio Jones is going to take over even more than he did last year. There is all the reason in the world to believe that Julio Jones could be the first player ever to record over 2,000 receiving yards in a season. He is that good. I have Jones tabbed for 123 catches, 1,952 yards and 13 touchdowns this season." Um, that would do.

There's no debate that Hopkins busted out in a big way in 2015 -- 111 grabs, over 1,500 yards and 11 scores. The question is whether Hopkins can keep that momentum rolling now that Brock Osweiler is the quarterback in Houston. Hopkins told the Houston Chronicle that his plan isn't to simply maintain his momentum. It's to build on it. "Always that's a goal with everybody who plays a pro sport is to get stronger and faster and work on things that you lack," Hopkins said. "I would say I've gained weight, gained more muscle. For myself, I want to improve in every category. I wasn't good at YAC, whatever that is. I don't really need too many categories, but I know I want to get better in any categories where I wasn't in the top five in the league." Of all the "elite" fantasy wideouts Hopkins has the most unsettled situation under center, but if Osweiler earns his $18 million in 2016 it's going to portend a huge year for "Nuk," who has zero chance of lasting into the second round of fantasy drafts.

Bryant was a victim of the injuries that ravaged the Dallas offense last year, missing seven games and posting career lows in every category other than yards per catch. The 27-year-old is still recovering from ankle and foot surgeries, but he told Jon Machota of the Dallas Morning News that he has every intention of returning to form (and then some) in 2016. "I feel good," Bryant said. "I'm right on time. I actually feel a little ahead of the game. But I'm going to stay patient. I'm not even trying to [get back] to 2014. I'm past that. I'm going to be better than that. I'm going to. The way we've been working, the way the coaches have been on us, the way we've been holding each other accountable, I think that alone is going to make us all be better than what we were in these past years." Much will depend on the health of quarterback Tony Romo, but assuming Romo holds up his end Bryant should as well -- both for the Cowboys and for fantasy owners.

If you're a fan of consistency in your fantasy receivers, then it's hard not to be a fan of the color Green. In five NFL seasons, Green has posted 1,000 yards five times. Three times he's topped 80 receptions and/or scored double-digit touchdowns. And each and every season Green has ranked among the top-10 fantasy wideouts in terms of points per game in standard formats. Despite all those tasty numbers, Connor Howe of SB Nation argues that Green is actually UNDER-valued in fantasy leagues. "Green is going to feast on an insane amount of targets this season," Howe said, "and that's not even considering whether Tyler Eifert misses time due to injury or not. Meanwhile, guys like (Julio) Jones and (DeAndre) Hopkins could potentially see reduced targets with new weapons entering the fold on their respective offenses . Fantasy analysts have deemed Green as injury-prone, but he has only officially missed four games in his five-year career." If you draft a RB in Round 1 and can still land Green as your top WR, you are officially off to a good start.

Robinson came into his own in a big way in his second NFL season, ranking 10th in the NFL in targets among WR, sixth in yardage, and numero uno in both yards per catch (for receivers with 50+ grabs) and touchdown catches. Still, despite those big numbers, Jason Schandl of NumberFire cautions against getting too wrapped up in Robinson's huge year. "Robinson may excite you," he said. "Maybe he was a sleeper who carried you to a championship last year, or maybe you missed Robinson in the draft and it haunted you for the whole season, but there is no avoiding the fact that his 2015 production was hugely improbable. Unless you're banking on his being one of the most dominant receivers the league has ever seen (or on Blake Bortles being really, really good), there's no way he should be in play with your first-round pick this year." It's true that touchdowns are often fluky, and it's a stat where regression is more rule than exception. But Schandl didn't say anything about not using a second-round pick on Robinson.

Despite spending much of 2015 suffering from a bad case of the dropsies Evans still had a solid sophomore season, putting up over 1,200 receiving yards on 74 grabs. It's his touchdowns, which plummeted from 12 in 2014 to three a year ago, that punched fantasy owners in the stomach, and Evans told Greg Auman of the Tampa Times it's there that he's most intent on improving in 2016, starting with the relationship he has with QB Jameis Winston. "We've been hanging out more. We're both busy guys, but we find time to hang out and throw when we can," Evans said at the start of off-season conditioning workouts. "I agree with (head coach) Dirk Koetter: Our chemistry was a little off last year, mostly on my end though. I feel it won't be a problem this year. Jameis is only going to get better. I'm going to get better. With a healthy V-Jax (Vincent Jackson), sky's the limit." It's that last part fantasy owners who draft Evans hope comes true.

When doing a post mortem of the sputtering Green Bay offense in 2015, the most obvious cause of failure is the absence of Nelson, who sat out the entire year with a torn ACL. The 31-year-old told the team's website he's being careful not to push his rehab too fast, but Nelson insists he'll be 100 percent for Week 1. "Everything I'm doing I'm comfortable with," Nelson said. "I'm not worried about anything else. We're still progressing and dealing with the situation that we're in. Obviously, we don't need to push it too much. We're still in May. Our goal is obviously August and September." Quarterback Aaron Rodgers admitted he's eager to get Nelson back on the field. "We missed a year together, so there will be some extra time we'll put together working on stuff and the little nuances that we added," Rodgers said. "We'll put in the necessary time to make sure we're on the same page." We've seen what can happen when they are on that same page -- Nelson was third among wide receivers in PPR fantasy points back in 2014.

Jeffery's fourth NFL season didn't go according to plan. After back-to-back 1,000-yard campaigns, Jeffery was limited to 807 yards and four scores in nine games in 2015 thanks to a number of injuries. Those injuries didn't stop the Bears from applying the franchise tag to Jeffery, and while he chose to work out on his own in Florida rather than attend voluntary OTAs, OC Dowell Loggains told ESPN he isn't worried about Jeffery's desire for a long-term deal becoming a distraction. "We all wish Alshon was here," Loggains said. "We're in constant communication with him. He knows how we feel about the situation and him. But it is an opportunity for some of these different receivers that we like to get opportunities, and we'll find out more about them. I know Alshon is working hard right now, and we're excited to get him back when he shows up." Jeffery has signed his franchise tender, making it highly unlikely that he'll skip mandatory camp and risk a fat fine. So long as he's good to go physically, fantasy owners shouldn't worry.

There may not be another wide receiver in NFL history who has had more success in more places than Marshall. Denver. Miami. Chicago. And last year in New York, with 109 catches for over 1,500 yards and a league-leading (tied) 14 scores. 2016 may bring a new challenge thanks to quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick's contract impasse with the team, but Marshall insisted to Bart Hubbuch of The New York Post that no matter who's under center he'll be fine. "Just seeing Bryce (Petty) and Geno (Smith) grow so much the last year is really encouraging, and I'm just proud of those guys," Marshall said. "We'll be OK. I haven't been around (Christian) Hackenberg much, but he seems like a pro." Given that Marshall's caught passes from any number of QBs who, um, sucked and still put up big stats, there's a part of us that believes him. But we'd still feel quite a bit better about his fantasy prospects if (as expected) the Jets and The Beard work something out. Monitor the situation.

Cooper topped the 1,000-yard mark as a rookie in 2015, but Yahoo's James Arcellana wrote that concentration was an issue for the Raiders' young star. "What's so frustrating about this," Arcellana said, "is that we've all seen Cooper make amazingly difficult catches and also drop shockingly easy ones. In fact, Cooper was second in the league in terms of the number of drops with 10, just one behind the leader, Mike Evans. Cooper has very good hands, anyone who thinks otherwise needs to go rewatch his games. The problem is, Cooper is constantly thinking about how to make the first guy miss. Because of that, you can literally see him take his mind and eyes off of the football at times as he prepares to try and juke someone. Hopefully, his rookie year taught Cooper that making the catch has to be priority No. 1." Of course, Arcellana then added, "Of all the players who are close enough to make the jump to being great this year, Cooper is the guy I am pretty confident will actually make that jump." So there's that.

In some respects, Allen was the poster child for San Diego's disappointing 2015 season. Over the first seven weeks of the season, Allen trailed only DeAndre Hopkins and Julio Jones among fantasy wideouts in PPR formats. Then Allen lacerated his kidney, and just like that, the season was over. It is the second straight year injuries have held Allen under 1,000 yards, but San Diego OC Ken Whisenhunt told the team's website he expects the dry spell to end in 2016. "He's grown," Whisenhunt said. "He obviously understands the game, the speed and what he has to do. The one thing that shows up all the time is that he makes plays. But he is at the point now where this is an important year because he's going to be a focal point. He is going to have to win one-on-one matchups. That is something that is a real testament to a receiver." We saw what Allen's capable of, both last year and in 2013. Now he just needs to stay on the field.

The Broncos were something of a hot mess at quarterback last year, and for parts of the year Thomas struggled badly with drops. And yet when all was said and done Thomas once again placed inside the top-12 fantasy options at his position in leagues that award a point for receptions, the fourth straight season the 28-year-old has hit that benchmark. Despite that consistency, Thomas has dipped into middling WR2 territory in early drafts. And Ryan Ward of NumberFire sees value to be had. "I want many pieces of this pie," Ward said. "The opportunity for targets in 2016 should still be ripe, touchdown regression -- positively -- could be coming, and the quarterback play in Denver would have to be absolutely abysmal to underperform what Denver had in 2015. Currently coming off of draft boards as the 15th receiver drafted according to FantasyFootballCalculator.com, the opportunity to get top-5 upside with a top-15 floor has never been higher. Draft Thomas now while his price doesn't reflect his talents." Ward will get zero arguments from us.

Cooks took a huge step forward in his second NFL season, topping 80 catches for over 1,100 yards with nine touchdowns. Those 2015 numbers rated Cooks a top-12 fantasy finish in leagues that award a point for catches, and Barry Hirtius of FanSided believes Cooks is only getting started. "(The addition of rookie Mike Thomas will) help shoulder some of the load that Cooks has taken upon himself as the team's top WR, (and) also help him try to avoid a lot of the double coverage by opposing defenses that rendered him ineffective for the first half of last season," Hirstius said. "If that happens -- as expected -- it could mean that Brandin Cooks is set to 'explode' in 2016." Even if all Cooks does is repeat his 2015 production he'd be a decent value as a high end fantasy WR2. If Hirstius and other pundits who expect even more are correct -- and Cooks works his way into the top 10 at his position -- then he's going to deliver much more. Time, as they say, will tell.

After an uneven rookie season, Watkins closed strong in 2015, flashing some of the potential that led the Bills to move up and take him in the 2014 NFL draft. However, a cloud was cast over Watkins' chances of building on that success this year when it was revealed Watkins recently had surgery to repair a broken foot. The news spooked Robert Molhar of Yahoo Sports. "Consider me a pessimist on this entire issue," he wrote. "While the Bills are optimistic of Watkins' return, no potential return date has been set. With Sammy being prone to injuries over the last couple of seasons, one has to wonder if this is the last we will hear of (it)." However, Buffalo head coach Rex Ryan told the Buffalo News he isn't sweating. "By the time the regular season comes around," Ryan said, "Sammy Watkins is not going to miss any time." There's ample fantasy upside present with Watkins, but durability issues and a run-first Bills' offense means just as much risk. Forewarned is forearmed.

It isn't often that a season in which a player tops 1,100 yards is considered a disappointment, but such was the case for Hilton in 2015. It marked the third time in four years that Hilton has surpassed the 1,000-yard mark, but head coach Chuck Pagano told WTTV-TV in Indianapolis that he expects even more from Hilton in the upcoming season. "T.Y. is having as good an offseason as anybody, probably better than anybody right now," Pagano said. "There's a lot of good stuff going on out there, but I've never seen this guy practice as fast as he's practicing right now and competing at the level he's competing at and leading the way he's leading. He's done it day in and day out." Hilton echoed his coach's sentiments. "Last year didn't go as planned, but nothing I can do but control what I can control. I'm just trying to get better, better my teammates and just continue to work and push those guys." With a healthy Andrew Luck throwing him the ball, there's more than a little upside here.

But despite setting a franchise record for catches last year with 110, Landry told ESPN's James Walker there's still loads of room for him to get better. "I feel like for me, [there is] always room to get better no matter how much you've accomplished, what you've done or what you can do," Landry said. "For me, I'm focused on continuing to build on my strengths, finding weaknesses in the details of our routes, details of catching the football, assignments and trying to master them. I think any guy that isn't No. 1 believes he should be No. 1. If not, I don't want to play with them; I don't want them around me. That's just the way I see it, and that's my competitive nature speaking out a little bit." The presence of rising young receiver DeVante Parker and rookie Leonte Carroo may mean a few less targets, but it should also mean fewer double-teams. Landry is a rock-solid WR2, especially in PPR formats.

After successive seasons with 90+ catches, Edelman's 2015 campaign was derailed by an injured foot. That foot remains an issue for Edelman, who had a pin inserted in it a few months ago. However, as Bernd Buchmasser indicated recently, the hope is the eighth-year veteran will be ready to rock for training camp. "[CSN New England's Jeff] Howe said that doctors have found a "very small crack" in Edelman's foot within the last couple of weeks that forced them to insert the aforementioned screw," Buchmasser said. "The procedure apparently went well, as Howe stated that the people he has spoken to are "very, very confident" that the wideout will be ready to be on the field on the first day of training camp in late July." That confidence is fine, but we know the Pats won't be letting folks know if there's a setback. Those durability concerns and Tom Brady's looming suspension add risk to drafting Edelman in 2016, but if he's healthy Edelman is money in PPR formats.

Given that Cobb had posted 90+ catches and almost 1,300 yards in 2014, when Jordy Nelson got hurt fantasy pundits felt Cobb could be set for a monster year as Aaron Rodgers' new No. 1 target. Not only did that not happen, but Cobb's 2015 numbers dipped substantially. However, Liz Loza of Yahoo Sports (a contributor to this very magazine) said that fantasy owners should not shy away from Cobb in 2016. "He's a young and gifted player with a defined skill set," Loza wrote. "Who, despite an underwhelming stat line, averaged 5.7 yards after the catch, which placed him among the top-20 players at the position for that statistical category. He's just not a No. 1 wideout. So what?!? Instead, he's the second best option on a team oft-rich with points and helmed by one of the most surgical passers in the league. If he stays healthy and is asked to do his job as a high volume slot/gadget guy then he can and will deliver stats similar to those he posted in 2014." Listen to the lady. It wasn't hard to one-up the Chiefs' wideouts from 2014, a motley crew that combined to find the end zone a grand total of nope. However, Maclin still drew oohs and aahs his first season in KC, reeling in almost 90 passes for over 1,000 yards and eight TDs. However, as CBS Sports pointed out look beneath the surface and a bit of the shine comes off. It was really pretty simple -- if Maclin found the end zone his fantasy owners were happy. But when he didn't he also posted lower yardage totals. Feast/famine receivers aren't for everyone, and this is the sort of variance can make Maclin a bit difficult to trust as a weekly starter in two-receiver formats, but he's also the unquestioned No. 1 receiving option for a Kansas City passing game that's better than many people think. Maclin may not be able to out-do last year's No. 17 finish in standard scoring formats, but assuming the 28-year-old stays healthy he won't finish far off that pace, making him a very solid draft-day WR3 target.

2015 was a lost season for Benjamin, who tore his ACL and didn't play a snap after racking up over 1,000 receiving yards as a rookie. However, Benjamin informed the team's website that not only is his knee 100 percent, but he isn't even thinking about the injury. "I try not to baby it," Benjamin said. "I try to go hard. Whatever the route is, I try to trust in the process that we have been doing, the rehabbing. So I just go ahead and make that plant." Still, Benjamin also allowed that he isn't a full participant at practice -- yet. "I still know I've got a lot to improve on," he said. "We are taking it slow, and I am feeling good about it. I can't wait to get to training camp." The expectation is that Benjamin will be green-lit for training camp. Assuming he is and doesn't suffer any setbacks, he can also be safely-green-lit as a fantasy WR2 -- and a potential value thanks to owners who may be a bit leery of investing heavily in a player coming off a significant injury.

Thanks to the retirement of Calvin Johnson, Tate is now the Lions' top wide receiver -- a role that many pundits feel he's not suited for. Mike Payton of SB Nation isn't hearing it. "It's really very simple in the end," Payton said. "Add up Tate's catching ability, what he can do with the ball after he catches it and his attitude. What you've got is a very exciting player that's more than ready to be 'the guy' on offense. Marvin Jones being a similar player who has some size on Tate only enhances what Tate can do. Throw in Theo Riddick and an improving Eric Ebron, and you have receiving threats that are pretty tough to stop." As Tim Twentyman of the team's website relayed, it isn't like Tate's been slacking the past two years. "There's history and chemistry between Matthew Stafford and Tate," Twentyman said. "He led the team in receptions each of the last two seasons with 99 and 90, respectively." Is Tate Calvin Johnson? Of course not. But he doesn't have to be to have value for fantasy owners.

Entering the 2015 season I totally predicted that Baldwin would tie for the NFL lead with 14 touchdown catches. Totally called it. In related news, I am also thoroughly full of crap. No one saw Baldwin's monster year coming, and no one really expects a repeat. But Liz Loza of Yahoo Sports thinks Baldwin should at least work his way back into the top 20 among fantasy wideouts in 2016. "Coming off of a patellar tear," she wrote, "Jimmy Graham is unlikely to play football in 2016 (or ever), cementing Baldwin as Russell Wilson's go-to option in the passing game. After all, not only is Baldwin in a contract year, but he's also been the team's most productive receiver for two seasons running. And with obvious question marks in Seattle's backfield, Dougie Doug is the team's most known and trusted quantity. I don't foresee another 1,000+ yard and 11 TD season, but could totally fathom a 72-950-9 campaign." This ranking has Baldwin coming in a bit under that bar, but still in high-end WR3 territory. Matthews had his coming-out party in 2015, finishing just a few yards shy of 1,000 on 85 receptions with eight touchdowns. There are big changes in store for the young wideout in 2016 with Doug Pederson now the head coach -- including a move to the outside after playing primarily in the slot last season. Matthews told CSN Philadelphia he welcomes the challenge. "We have a lot of situations where guys get to move around a lot more than the previous offense I played in," Matthews said, "so that's something that a lot of us have been excited about. Me in particular, I'm really excited to have the opportunity to go outside as much as inside, so now teams won't be able to game plan for me in just one area. It's been great learning it. The verbiage is definitely different. It's not one word or signs or anything like that. We're having fun with it." Matthews was 20th in PPR scoring systems a season ago, and it isn't hard to imagine him at least hitting that mark again this season.

After topping 1,100 yards and scoring at least six touchdowns each of the last two seasons, it may seem we're lowballing Sanders here -- but this ranking reflects the very real concerns about the state of the quarterback position for the defending champs. Given those issues, Troy Renck of the Denver Post wrote recently that Denver needs leaders to step up -- leaders like Sanders. A check list emerges for leaders, and points to Sanders. The player must produce. Players can't lead without delivering. It's reality in athletic Darwinism. And it's not just how many yards, but how he accumulates them. Sanders can break free deep, but he rolls up his sleeves and lives over the middle where every tackle is a car crash. Which brings me to my next point. Sanders' grit. He was nearly decapitated two years ago at St. Louis, but he keeps punching the clock. FWIW, the Denver quarterbacks were a Dumpster fire last year, and Sanders was WR18 in PPR systems. Even if he tails off a bit from that, he's a steal at his current ADP.

The Arizona Cardinals may well possess the NFL's most loaded WR corps with Larry Fitzgerald, John Brown and Floyd. In the opinion of Josh Weinfuss of ESPN, it's Floyd who has the most to prove in 2016. "Floyd is heading into the option year of his rookie contract," Weinfuss said, "and all that is on the line is a mega-deal as a (new) team's top wide receiver or a big extension from the Cardinals to continue being Robin to Larry Fitzgerald's Batman. Floyd hasn't had a 1,000-yard season since 2013, although a hand injury likely prevented him from hitting the mark last season. He went on a tear during the second half of last season, finishing with five 100-yard games in his final eight." Floyd told 98.7 FM in Phoenix he welcomes the challenge. "If I just maintain," Floyd said, "doing what I'm doing, on and off the field, I think that side of everything -- the business side -- will take care of itself." It's a crowded pass-catching corps for certain, but it's also a prolific offense with loads of upside.

So much for being over the hill. After three straight down years, many talking heads proclaimed that Fitzgerald's best days were behind him. Turns out not so much, as in 2015 Fitzgerald caught a career-high 109 passes, topped 1,200 yards, scored nine times and finished seventh at the position in PPR fantasy points. Now 32, Fitzgerald told the team's website he has no idea when it will be time for him to hang up his cleats. "Honestly, I have no idea," Fitzgerald said. "I really don't look at it like that. I look at it as a day-to-day. I feel good every day, waking up and going to practice. Last year I was able to stay healthy. That puts you in a different state of mind when you are able to get up and do everything you are capable of doing. I'm still here every day for the most part, still do the reps they ask me to do. Nothing has changed, for the most part." The end comes for everyone, but from all appearances Fitz' end ain't here just yet.

The second half of the most potent one-two receiving punch in the NFL last year, Decker was also one of fantasy football's best values at the position. Per average draft position data at My Fantasy League, Decker was selected 33rd among wide receivers. He finished the year a full 20 spots higher. But the Jets once again missed the playoffs, and he told Fox Sports his main concern is dethroning the New England Patriots in the AFC East. "I think we're there, to be honest. With Brady being suspended four games, I think it makes the division up for grabs. Again, I believe in this team, and we're ready to make the run now," Decker said. Of course, for fantasy owners considering burning a mid-round pick for Decker, the bigger concern is the unresolved contract impasse between the Jets and Ryan Fitzpatrick. Yes, Brandon Marshall might be able to post WR1 numbers with Geno Smith under center. But Decker didn't come into his own in Denver until the arrival of Peyton Manning. Not only is Smith not Manning, but he isn't Fitz either.

Brown put up the first 1,000-yard season of his young career in 2015, hauling in 65 passes for 1,003 yards and seven touchdowns at a robust 15.4 yards per grab. As the two-year veteran told Arizona Sports, he's only getting started. "My confidence level is real high, and I can play different positions now because the things that go around, I learn from Larry (Fitzgerald)," he said. "So working on those things. During OTAs I've been doing exactly what I'm supposed to do and it feels good. I'm adjusted to everything now, and I can just go out and be me. I try to take it one day at a time and try not to get too excited." Fantasy owners were very excited about Brown a year ago, and that enthusiasm paid off. But last year's sleeper appeal is now this year's expectations, and while Brown has plenty of potential in a prolific Redbirds' aerial attack, there are also a lot of mouths to feed in Arizona. That sets the stage for the sort of high-variance fantasy option best suited for WR3 status.

On the lookout for a breakout receiver in 2016? OK, that's a stupid question -- everyone's looking for a breakout receiver in 2016. OK, everyone playing fantasy football is looking for a breakout wide receiver in 2016. Anyway, Jacob Gibbs of NumberFire recommends Moncrief. "He's still somehow just 22 years old and has the talent and opportunity to post an Allen Robinson-like breakout next season if things fall in his favor," Gibbs said. "Considering his immense potential, he is quite the steal as the 30th-ranked receiver. He makes for an excellent high-upside second or third receiver in re-draft formats and an extremely enticing target in dynasty formats. His breakout seems imminent, and his draft cost doesn't account for his upside." We have Moncrief ranked a bit higher than that, but I'll admit an Allen Robinson stat line pushes the bounds of optimism. But the crux of Gibbs' point is sound. Moncrief is young and talented and set for a bump in targets. Toss in a healthy Andrew Luck and all the ingredients for a big year are there.

Parker's rookie year got off to a very sluggish start, but compliments of a strong stretch run and considerable talent the former Louisville star is a trendy pick among the fantasy community to break out in 2016. As Chris Perkins of the South Florida Sun-Sentinel reported, it isn't just fantasy types who have high hopes for Parker's second season -- the Dolphins do as well. "I think you saw, the last six to eight games of the year, his confidence start to build," quarterback Ryan Tannehill said. "He made more and more plays it seemed like as the weeks went on. He got more comfortable and more confident and was attacking the football. He's starting at that point now. We can build from where he is at now, and the sky is the limit for him." Of course, Parker will need Tannehill to pick up his game also, and players with a lot of buzz often carry a higher draft-day sticker price. Whether paying that increased price ends up being a wise decision will come down to production meeting potential. The latter's there to be sure.

When the Raiders signed Crabtree last offseason, the collective reaction of the fantasy community was a hearty "meh." After all, it had been years since Crabtree's lone big season. Injuries appeared to have sapped his explosiveness. It turned out the saps were the folks sleeping on Crabtree's potential, as he caught 85 passes, scored nine touchdowns and finished the season No. 17 among WR in PPR fantasy football leagues. And per the team's website, in OTAs this year Crabtree looks like he wants to build on those numbers. "The veteran wideout has been impressive over the past several days, gliding through drills and making impressive catches during the team's 11-on-11 sessions," they said. "Carr is right, Crabtree looks incredibly at ease out wide, and he certainly hasn't seemed to miss a beat during the offseason layoff." Frankly, the fact that Crabtree is ranked this low says more about the depth available to fantasy drafters at wide receiver (at least in the WR3 area) than it does anything about him as a player. We'd have no qualms rostering him as a third receiver.

Hurns was one of the bigger surprises at the wide receiver position in 2015, going over 1,000 yards and finding the end zone 10 times despite spending much of the year battling one nagging malady after another. In fact, even considering Blake Bortles' huge season, Hank Jones of SB Nation posited that it was Hurns who showed the most improvement for the Jags in 2015. "Because of his breakout 2015 season," Jones wrote, "Hurns has solidified his place as a starting wideout for the Jaguars. He's set himself up for a contract extension sooner than later. He also showed that he has the ability to improve upon weaknesses, and turn them into strengths. Allen Hurns became a clutch player in 2015. That is all there is to it. And that is why he was the most improved player on the Jaguars' offense." Much like with Allen Robinson, last year's numbers will be hard for Hurns to back up. But he doesn't have to do anything more than that to justify this ADP. Consider him a WR3 with substantial upside in 2016.

Jackson's under more than a little pressure heading into a contract year after a "down" second season in DC in which he barely surpassed 500 receiving yards. However, Redskins' blogger Rich Tandler cautioned that fantasy owners hoping for a rebound season from the 29-year-old are setting themselves up for a letdown. "I sense some high expectations for Jackson this year," Tandler said, "but I'm not so sure that a big year for him is in the cards. I don't think he'll be a bust but I don't think he'll approach his 2014 stat line of 56 receptions for 1,169 yards (20.9 yards/catch) and six touchdowns. He's likely to miss a few games with injuries -- he has only played 16 games in a season only once in his eight years in the league. And the additions of Josh Doctson and Vernon Davis and a possible resurgence in the running game will mean fewer targets for him. Jackson will be more productive than he was last year (30/528/4) but a 1,000-yard season looks unlikely." That skepticism is demonstrated by this ranking.

36:39) Marvin JONES — DET

Exp. 5th year | Age: 26 | Ht: 6-2 | Wt: 199 | BYE: 10

Jones, who was the crown jewel of a rather uninspiring crop of free agent wide receivers, was inked by the Lions as part of their efforts to begin the post-Calvin Johnson era. Now, no one is going to go comparing Marvintron and Megatron, but Jones told the team's website he's doing his best to acclimate quickly. "It's going great," Jones said. "We've had a little over a month to get some camaraderie between the quarterbacks and the wide receivers, and everything has been good. We've been going hard and it all shows what we're doing this offseason to prepare. We haven't even practiced yet. We've been throwing routes on air and stuff like that, but obviously it'll pick up when we start getting defenses on us and stuff like that. It'll take some time, but it's going great right now." Jones may not be a future Hall-of-Famer, but he's a more than capable pro receiver -- and one who could represent great value for fantasy drafters as a WR4 with WR3+ upside. We'll be targeting him regularly if his ADP holds here.

37:35) Corey COLEMAN — CLE

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 21 | Ht: 5-10 | Wt: 190 | BYE: 13

Coleman was the first wide receiver drafted in 2016, and appears (from an immediate impact standpoint) to have fallen into the best situation among his rookie peers. So much so, in fact, that Chase Howell of Pro Football Focus labeled Coleman an Offensive Rookie of the Year candidate. If the Browns' receiver situation was dire in 2015, Howell said, "things only got worse in terms of returning targets this offseason. Travis Benjamin will be running routes for San Diego QB Philip Rivers in 2016, and Cleveland recently cut Brian Hartline (No. 59 WR in PFF grades last season). That pair accounted for 58.0 percent of the Browns' WR targets in 2015." It doesn't exactly help that Coleman showed up to OTAs out of shape, and that the QB situation in Cleveland is as unsettled as anywhere in the NFL. But whoever takes the reins under center for the Browns is going to have to throw the ball somewhere, making Coleman an interesting fantasy WR4 with a great deal of upside.

At this point in the rankings, fantasy owners start digging for gems. Searching for players prepared to post the sort of breakout season that can propel a fantasy squad all the way to a title. And Ryan Bonini of USA Today wrote that Lockett is just such a player in 2016. "Lockett reminds me a lot of Green Bay's Randall Cobb," Bonini said, "whose production jumped from 25 catches in his rookie year to 80 the following. Similar success should be in store for Lockett. Lockett caught at least three passes in seven games during the second-half of last season, scoring five of his six touchdowns in that period. He was targeted at least five times in five of those games. Wilson's trust in him grew, as did Lockett's understanding of the system. As fantasy football drafts approach, earmark a WR3 spot on your squad for Lockett and you won't be disappointed. Expect 70-plus catches to go along with 900 yards and at least eight touchdowns in his second season." You heard the man. Make with the earmarking.

White's rookie season did not go according to script -- unless that script called for the former West Virginia standout and first-round pick to suffer a shin injury that would cost him the entire campaign. However, White is 100 percent healthy and back on the practice field, developing a rapport with Jay Cutler and, according to CBS Chicago, eager to wipe the memory of last year's troubles off the books. "I felt like I let my team down, the organization down, the fans down," White said. "That was the hardest thing I had to take through last year. Jay's a great leader, a great teammate. He wants nothing but the best for us. He wants to win -- he wants to win now. The bad things (critics) say about Jay are not true at all. He's a really good guy, a really good person once you get to know him. I'm excited for us." Fantasy owners are excited by White's physical gifts, but there's no denying the risk involved with a player whose next meaningful NFL snap will be his first one.

Fantasy leagues aren't won in Round 1. They are won in the middle to late rounds, by drafters who are able to identify players set for breakout seasons. According to John Sigler of FanSided, you can throw Snead into the mix for just that sort of campaign. "The addition of Ohio State's Michael Thomas will be huge for Snead moving forward," he said. "He sniffed 1,000 yards as a starter, coming up short by only 16 yards, and converted 68.3 percent of his 101 targets. It's not likely that Snead will get those many opportunities again in 2016, but the cards are in his favor. Snead's "demotion" to the third receiver from the second option will be huge for his production. He'll be drawing coverage from other teams' third corners rather than one of the top two options. There's no telling what Snead could do in that situation, but it's safe to say he'll bag more than three touchdowns in his second year starting." Remember -- it isn't how many targets a player gets. It's what they make out of the ones they do.

When Green-Beckham entered the NFL last year, we knew he was an exceptionally talentedpass-catcher. We also knew he was exceptionally raw. We saw flashes of the former during his rookie season, and DGB told the team's site his off-season goal has been to polish up the latter. "I feel like them saying that is them giving a challenge to me and saying to me that working in the offseason and (they're) using that to get my head into motivation," Green-Beckham said. "That motivates me that I can become one of the big guys in this offense and on this team. I want to try to do that for myself also. I use that as motivation every time I go and work out. That's what I'm trying to become is the person they want me to become. I see myself as being that No. 1 receiver, because I know that I can help this offense. That's my motivation, to go out in the offseason and work hard and try to become that No. 1 receiver and go out there and just dominate. That's my motivation right now." An improving Marcus Mariota won't hurt either.

Martavis Bryant's season-long suspension creates a huge hole opposite Antonio Brown in the Pittsburgh passing game -- and yet another opportunity for Wheaton to realize his potential as a professional. Dan Sagar of SB Nation thinks that 2016 is the year that finally happens. "There's no doubting that Wheaton's statistics thus far have been relatively pedestrian," Sagar said. "However, it can be argued (albeit objectively) that Wheaton's gross numbers aren't wholly representative of what he brings to the table. Sure, his 749 yards last season ranked just 48th in the NFL, but his 17.0 yards per catch ranked 10th among players with at least 25 catches. He was fourth in the NFL in that category among players with at least 40 catches. Additionally, over 70 percent of Wheaton's receptions were good for first downs last season. That, too, is one of the highest percentages in the league." We've heard similar refrains before, and youngster Sammie Coates is nipping at Wheaton's heels, but there's no denying the situation in Pittsburgh is ripe for a career year from Wheaton. The rest is up to him.

Benjamin parlayed a career year into parole from the football hell called Cleveland thanks to a free agent deal with the Chargers, where he will replace Malcom Brown as the team's vertical threat. Andrew Long of FanSided thinks the best is yet to come with Benjamin. "While Benjamin didn't produce on a regular basis until (2015)," Long wrote, "I believe that he has turned a corner in terms of skill level and understanding of the professional game. That being said, I foresee the San Diego Chargers being the team that benefits from his recent development. Benjamin managed to record solid stats for the Cleveland Browns, a team with a history of poor quarterback play and very little talent on the offensive side of the ball. If he was able to accomplish what he did with his supporting cast in Cleveland, I cannot wait to see what he does with a legitimate quarterback and talented group of players in San Diego." We agree wholeheartedly -- Benjamin's a great value pick later in drafts as a fantasy WR4.

With the arrival of Laquon Treadwell some have theorized that last year's promising debut may be as good as things get for Diggs' fantasy owners. However, Matt Eurich of Today's Pigskin believes the opposite is true -- that Treadwell's arrival will, in fact, make Diggs more productive. "Once the opposition saw what the young receiver could do in the open field," Eurich said, "defenses began targeting Diggs in the passing game by sliding extra help to his side of the field. After recording 419 receiving yards in his first four game, Diggs registered just 301 yards in the final nine regular season games. In Minnesota's lone playoff game against the Seattle Seahawks, he was held to just one catch for four yards. Diggs is at his best when playing in space and with the ball in his hands, and with Treadwell now on the roster, the former Maryland standout will have a chance to put up even better numbers in his sophomore campaign." It's a sound argument -- Diggs isn't ready for the fantasy scrap heap just yet.

Settle in for some draft-day story time, courtesy of numberFire's Matt Blair. "The 13th round is usually when fantasy football drafts go haywire," Blair said. "Your friend who drank too much before the draft is trying to draft Jay Cutler for the third round in a row. Your other friend who wore Zubaz pants that last fit him 15 years ago is beginning to experience stomach pains. Another clown inevitably drafts someone who was released days earlier. Someone gets booed for taking the first kicker of the draft and then tries to justify it. The 13th round is also the round that Torrey Smith is being drafted in for 2016. We should not expect Smith to return to accruing 1,000 yards or scoring double-digit touchdowns, but the upside is always there in Kelly's offense." Blair's about as spot-on as you can be. It isn't hard to see why Smith's ranked where he is. But it's also rare to be able to obtain the top option in any NFL passing game this cheaply. It's the definition of a no-risk pick.

46:42) Sterling SHEPARD NYG

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 22 | Ht: 5-10 | Wt: 193 | BYE: 8

At this point, it's fair to wonder if Victor Cruz will ever play again, much less come close to the form he showed before his horrific knee injury. The Giants have apparently realized this as well, selecting Shepard in Round 2 of this year's draft. As Jordan Raanan of NJ.com pointed out, the former Oklahoma star didn't waste any time opening eyes at OTAs. "One week after quarterback Eli Manning said Shepard hadn't dropped a pass," Raanan said, "you could see why he was so impressed. Shepard didn't start with the first-team offense, but he still had opportunities, working with Manning and backup Ryan Nassib. The second-round pick looked good. He caught several passes during the practice, showcasing the strong hands and power that have the Giants excited." There's no question that Odell Beckham is the top dog in Big Blue's receiving corps, but things get muddy mighty quickly after that. If Shepard keeps drawing raves from camp and can secure the No. 2 job opposite Beckham, he has a shot at top rookie WR honors in fantasy leagues.

47:53) Vincent JACKSON TB

Age appeared to have caught up with Jackson in 2015, as he missed six games and posted fewer than 600 receiving yards. And as longtime Bucs beat man Pat Yasinskas of Today's Pigskin wrote, that puts Jackson's career at a crossroads. "It looks like Jackson's career is in free fall and it might be," he said. "He's 33 years old, an age when many wide receivers go into steep decline or simply just retire. Is Jackson ready for that? I don't think so. If he can stay healthy, another 1,000-yard season is possible. If not, the Bucs could be in big trouble. The Bucs don't need Jackson to be their No. 1 receiver. (Mike) Evans already has claimed that role. The Bucs clearly need a No. 2 receiver and the question is if he can still fill that role. He has the size, experience and intangibles." Frankly, this late in drafts Jackson's worth a roll of the dice at the very least. If he has one more year left in the tank, bargain-city. If not, you haven't really lost anything.

Austin finally showed some of his Round 1 pedigree in 2015, and Los Angeles head man Jeff Fisher told the team's website Austin's mini-breakout last season was only the tip of the proverbial iceberg. "It's going to all focus off the run game," Fisher said. "We're going to be able to, if need be, hand it off to Todd (Gurley) and if someone says "we're not going to let you do that," then we're going to spread it around. And so when it's all said and done, I think we'll be able to look back and I think see Tavon maybe double in catches over what he had last year. And that's the most important thing, is just get the chunks downfield." A double down year would put Austin over 100 receptions and into fantasy WR1 territory. That isn't going to happen. However, thanks to his abilities as both a runner and receiver, Austin finished last season inside the top 25 in standard scoring formats. A finish anywhere near that in 2016 would make Austin one of this year's biggest bargains given his draft-day price tag.

49:41) Laquon TREADWELL — MIN

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 21 | Ht: 6-2 | Wt: 210 | BYE: 6

Treadwell may be the new kid on the block in Minnesota, but as Chris Tomasson of the St. Paul Pioneer-Press reported the former Ole Miss star is determined to become fast friends with Vikings quarterback Teddy Bridgewater. "I'm just making the most out of every opportunity I get on the field and every rep that I get," Treadwell said. "I still have a lot of things to get better at; until I do that, I'll probably be (on the second team) for a while. It's a work in progress, and I've just got to stay focused. I think everybody here is confident for a (starting) spot, and I've just got to keep working." Bridgewater said his newest target is a quick study. "There's a reason we drafted him in the first round, so we expect things from him this year, and we can't wait to get him out there," Bridgewater said. Concerns about Treadwell's straight line speed are overblown -- he can play. The bigger worry for fantasy owners is a ceiling capped by a Minnesota passing game that isn't exactly prolific.

Last year was supposed to be it for Smith. The swan song. The end of the line. But Smith's plans changed when he tore his Achilles' midway through his farewell tour. Now the old man is coming back for one more year, 39 catches shy of 1,000 for his career. As Clifton Brown of CSN Mid-Atlantic wrote, Smith has every intention of hitting that benchmark. "Only 13 players have reached 1,000 career receptions, and Smith should get there," Brown said, "entering the season with 961 catches. Smith has caught at least 46 passes every season since 2005. After putting off retirement and recovering from an Achilles injury, Smith will be driven to prove he can still play up to his standards." Smith isn't getting any younger (quite the opposite) and a torn Achilles' is no joke. But it's worth pointing out that two years ago Smith was a fantasy WR1 over the season's first half before fading down the stretch. It's not often a player this long in the tooth qualifies as an upside play. Smith just might fit that bill.

51:58) Kendall WRIGHT — TEN

Back in 2014, Wright appeared to be a young star in the making. He was coming off a season in which he topped 90 catches and went over 1,000 yards. Since then, however, it's been downhill. Wright added 12 pounds of muscle this offseason in advance of a move inside -- although per the team's website several pounds of that weight comes in the form of a chip on Wright's shoulder. "I don't know what the plan is (as far as where I'll line up),'' Wright said. "If they say, 'Hey, Kendall, you need to play in the slot,' what am I going to say: 'No?' I am going to go out there and play in the slot and hopefully there's a linebacker on me. I know those guys definitely can't cover me, and it would be hard for a DB or whoever to cover me in the slot. If I am told to play in the slot, that's what I'll do." Frankly, Wright belongs in the slot, so maybe the change in role will spark a resurgence.

52:51) Josh DOCTSON — WAS

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 23 | Ht: 6-2 | Wt: 195 | BYE: 9

From the moment the Redskins drafted Doctson, there has been speculation that Pierre Garcon's starting job is in very real danger. Mike Jones of the Washington Post thinks reports of Garcon's demise are exaggerated. "Garcon had only one dropped pass in 2015," Jones said. "He averaged a solid 10.8 yards per catch and recorded six touchdown receptions, his most since joining Washington. He makes tough catches in traffic and brings a toughness to the position. Why get rid of that for an unproven rookie? Just because Doctson has great size and athleticism doesn't mean he's ready to step in as a starter. And even if Doctson does come in and light it up, given the lack of dependability from [DeSean] Jackson last season as he battled various nagging injuries (and his lack of versatility -- he's really not a threat unless running the deep route), it's smart to have another veteran to turn to." Add to that the fact that Doctson's been battling foot injuries early in OTAs, and it appears the odds of his making an early fantasy dent aren't great. His dynasty future, however, is another story.

53:61) Kamar AIKEN — BAL

Aiken was a bright spot for the Ravens last season, leading their receivers with 75 catches, 944 yards and five touchdowns. Where Aiken excelled was catching the ball, bringing in at least five receptions in each of the nine games he served as the No. 1 receiver with Steve Smith out. Most of his damage was done when injury and attrition left him as nearly the last wideout standing for the Baltimore. The problem is he's much more productive receiver in PPR leagues and his role will likely diminish this year with Smith and Breshad Perriman back from injuries. The addition of Mike Wallace adds to that problem. Still, Aiken showed last year he could produce when called upon. That might make him worth a very late-round pick flyer in deep PPR leagues.

54:52) Michael THOMAS — NOR

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 21 | Ht: 6-3 | Wt: 210 | BYE: 5

Thomas may not be the most talented wideout in the 2016 class, but he might have won the situation lottery, landing in New Orleans as the heir apparent to Marques Colston's role as the team's big-bodied wideout. Quarterback Drew Brees talked up Thomas' knowledge of the playbook at OTAs while talking to ESPN. "It was one of those where I'm just in the moment, and hey, he's my guy over there at that position," Brees said. "So I kind of give him a look, give him a signal or whatever, and he goes and makes the play. And ran the route just like I imagined. So that makes you feel good too. 'Hey, we're on the same page even though we haven't even talked about that yet. You kind of know this offense, you have a feel for the game.' So I like when I see that stuff out of young guys, where you kind of feel like there's some instincts there." Hearing that Brees and Thomas have already developed a comfort level is music to fantasy owners' ears.

Agholor was a favorite of many fantasy pundits entering the NFL and a regular on fantasy "sleeper" lists last year. And boy oh boy was he asleep for most of his first NFL season. Comatose, even. However, Agholor told ESPN's Phil Sheridan he aims to show that last year's faith wasn't misplaced...just early. "I look at last season, and I say I did not take advantage of a great opportunity," Agholor said. "At the end of the day, that is what I must do this year. I'm still in position to take advantage of a great opportunity, and that's what I've got to do. This offense does a great job in terms of getting guys into positions to execute different concepts, to execute versus different coverages," Agholor continued. "We're not just calling stuff. We're calling stuff that's best for the coverage." Agholor has veteran Rueben Randle to contend with for the No. 2 receiver job, and last year's enthusiasm has given way to this year's skepticism, but there's potential here at a minimal draft day investment.

Dorsett bulked up this offseason in an effort to better withstand the rigors of the NFL. Maybe it was that increased size that led Conor Orr of NFL.com to mention Dorsett as a player who might break out in 2016. "Dorsett could be an explosive wide receiver," Orr said, "but like the Rams discovered with Tavon Austin, it is difficult to find that out without getting creative and giving him the ball. The Colts' offense was muddled at best last year, with an injured Andrew Luck and a confused scheme that was attempting to placate several target-hungry wide receivers. This year should be different. Dorsett averaged a little more than three targets per game a year ago. With the subtraction of tight end Coby Fleener and wide receiver Andre Johnson, there should be more opportunities for Dorsett to move up in the progression and catch some passes." More likely, it was Dorsett's blazing speed that drew Orr's attention. That speed could portend some long touchdowns this season, but a lack of consistent targets may well also lead to some goose-eggs. A feast/famine option.

Funchess had a relatively quiet rookie season, but the converted tight end showed signs of improvement as the season wore on. As head coach Ron Rivera told Jonathan Jones of the Charlotte Observer, it was simply a matter of getting reps -- a young prospect learning by doing. "You wish he could have had them all through training camp where he could have gotten some quality reps, especially when we had Miami in town (for joint practices), but we didn't," Rivera said. "Initially it was slow and initially he was frustrated because he wanted to play more. But at that point he didn't know enough. Probably Week 6-7-8 he showed us he knew enough and you started to see the growth. The more he got on the field, the better he played. Competition makes everybody else better. You can see it." Of course, that's also the problem. With Kelvin Benjamin, Ted Ginn and tight end Greg Olsen all in front of him in the pecking order consistent reps (and targets) may still be hard to come by for Funchess in 2016.

Ever since the tragic disappearance of Roddy White (one day he was there, the next just...gone) the Falcons have been searching for a complement to Julio Jones. They hope to have found it in Sanu, who spent the first four years of his career in Cincinnati. Sanu told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution that he's learned a great deal playing opposite stars like A.J. Green and (soon) Julio Jones. "They are hard-working guys," Sanu said. "They are always putting extra work in after every workout session and film session. The guys want to be great, and I can see that in them from of those guys. It's great to learn from both of those guys and get an understanding on how they see things. I'm just trying to get on the same page with both of them. I understand where I fit in. I understand that I have to get open within the timing of the play." Two years ago as the Bengals' No. 2 WR he finished as WR37 in PPR leagues. That's a reasonable expectation in his new digs.

The Redskins didn't have an immediate need at receiver, with Garcon, DeSean Jackson and Jamison Crowder their top three. However, both Jackson and Garcon are in the final year of their contracts, so the selection of Josh Doctson in the first round of April's draft gives the Redskins a younger, cheaper alternative already in place -- and a talented one. But assuming Garcon is still on board Week 1, what can fantasy owners expect? He had 72 catches for 777 yards and six touchdowns in 2015. And while he closed the season with a touchdown in each of his final three outings, his targets could be limited by the arrival of Doctson. As CBSSports.com reminded readers, after his breakout season in 2013 when he had 113 catches for 1,346 yards and five touchdowns, Garcon has combined for 140 catches, 1,529 yards and nine touchdowns the past two years. Consider Garcon a spot-substitute at this point.

We have added a new piece of information to our player rankings this year -- the Average Draft Position (ADP). The ADP, which is included with the ranking -- separated by a colon -- represents an average of several recent drafts from around the country. The representation we are using here is by position. You can also convert the ADP to an overall draft position such as 12.07 (12th round - seventh pick). The ADP gives you a feel for where a player is going around the country, allowing you to adjust your draft selection in order to acquire the best players possible. If the CheatSheets magazine ranks a player as the 14th best QB and his ADP is 21, then you may want to wait until a few more QBs are taken before selecting him.

Team Target (TM TRG) is the percentage of pass plays in which an offense "targets" the player in question. This stat can be very telling -- adding a unique perspective on draft day. Percentage Caught (% CHT) further enhances the Team Target stat by providing the number of times each player came through with a reception when targeted.

At no other position in fantasy football is the spread between the No. 1 and No. 2 options as wide as at tight end. It's Gronkowski's world -- everyone else just lives in it. His dominance of the position is evidenced both by Gronk's status as the cover athlete for "Madden 17" and by his first-round price tag in many fantasy drafts -- a price that's being driven, in part (per CBS Sports), by the injuries hitting other top tight ends. "You know Rob Gronkowski is being drafted in Round 1," Jamey Eisenberg wrote, "and his stock continues to improve with each injury. While some owners don't like the idea of drafting a tight end in the first round, you know what Gronkowski brings to the table -- consistent domination. That tends to put a lot of owners at ease when you have him on your roster." It isn't a pick for the faint of heart, but it's also one that can pay huge dividends if Gronkowski approaches his ceiling. All a matter of faith in your ability to find value at WR and RB later on.

2:2) Jordan REED — WAS

Exp. 4th year | Age: 25 | Ht: 6-2 | Wt: 236 | BYE: 9

Reed broke out in a big way in his third NFL season, reeling in almost 90 passes, flirting with 1,000 yards and finding the end zone 11 times. Reed parlayed that big year into a fat contract extension -- one that both teammates and opponents say he earned. Safety Dashon Goldson told CSN Washington, "I wouldn't call him a tight end. A lethal weapon, put it like that. You want to put a safety on him. You want to put a linebacker on him. You can do what you want, but he's just a true talent." Arizona's Tyrann Mathieu agreed. "He's one of those tough assignments," said Mathieu. "He's slippery. He's basically a wide receiver in a tight end's body." Former Washington quarterback Robert Griffin added, ""He's unstoppable, right? J. Reed is a monster." Reed has earned more than those accolades and a fat stack of cash -- he's also earned consideration in fantasy drafts as one of the top options at his position. He won't come nearly as cheaply as a year ago though. Dangit.

Like many NFL players, Olsen has heard the criticisms of angry fantasy owners on social media. As Alexis Chassen of SB Nation wrote, Olsen got the chance to show how ludicrous those critics are on a recent episode of Amy Schumer's comedy show. "(Olsen) joined Washington tight end Vernon Davis, Jets fullback Tommy Bohanon and former Giant Michael Strahan on 'Inside Amy Schumer'," Chassen relayed. In a send-up of fantasy football folks who tend to be harsh to the players on their rosters, the NFLers sat in a bar trashing normal people doing mundane things. Olsen lamented, "'I don't know why I do this to myself' after his guy bought an extended warranty from Davis' man. In the four-minute skit, Olsen showed off good comedic chops -- and a little NSFW language." Olsen was funny, but he should stick to his day job -- racking up 1,000-yard seasons as the top option in Carolina's passing game. If he can accomplish the feat again in 2016, that would make three in a row -- and we're not about to go betting against him.

2015 was a career year and then some for Walker, who set personal bests in receptions (94), yardage (1,088) and touchdowns (six) en route to a top-5 fantasy finish in PPR formats. Tennessee rewarded Walker with a contract extension, and he told the team's website he intends to repay them for their investment. "They invested in me once before," Walker said, "and now they have done it again, and I am not going to let them down. I am going to go out there and give it all I've got. I am a hard worker on the field and off the field. I do a lot in the community, so I am kind of grounded here in Nashville. I am just thankful for the opportunity they have given me, so I don't want to let them down. So I feel like I am going to go out there and have a better year. Each year, I want to be better than the next." Still the top threat in the Titans' passing attack, Walker's a high-floor fantasy option.

5:4) Travis KELCE — KAN

Like Jordan Reed, Kelce turned a career year into a big contract, signing a five-year, $46 million pact in the offseason. The 26-year-old told the Chiefs' website he's aware that the big deal carries with it big expectations. "Yeah, every single year comes more accountability," Kelce said. "And the contract puts a lot more on my plate in terms of being a leader and being around the office and knowing that I have re-signed to where I'm going to be around for a while. It's definitely put a little more accountability, but just more of a understanding for me that I still have to go out there and play to make what I'm worth." He also insisted to ESPN that the taping of his reality show hasn't interfered with his preparation for the season. "I think it will be a pretty funny show," he said." But I'm more excited for the actual football season than anything else." So are Kelce's fantasy owners -- because the Chiefs aren't the only ones entering 2016 with increased expectations where he's concerned.

6:7) Coby FLEENER NOR

Exp. 5th year | Age: 27 | Ht: 6-6 | Wt: 247 | BYE: 5

Average		92	5	0/0	0.0	52/624	16	14%	60%

After four years in Indianapolis, Fleener joined the Saints in free agency. It may not be reasonable to expect Fleener to be the next Jimmy Graham, but head coach Sean Payton indicated (per the team's website) that Fleener's addition should help the Saints in the red zone. "I would say so," Payton said. "It wasn't an initial target, and yet when we bring in a player like that, there has to be (a vision), no different than when we draft a player. We talk about it all the time, what is the vision? I would say, certainly for him, it would start with a receiver first, whether it is third down or whether it is red area. Those would be areas where we think he can help." The Saints have put a tight end into the top 10 each of the past five seasons, and while Fleener has burned fantasy owners before, there's ample reason to think he could be on the verge of a career season. He's a solid weekly starter with more than a little upside.

It wasn't that long ago that Eifert was ranked just behind Gronk after his breakout 2015 season in which he led all tight ends with 13 touchdown catches. However, Eifert's fantasy value is now up in the air, thanks to ankle surgery that will likely cost him all of training camp -- and possibly some of the regular season. The injury, which occurred in the Pro Bowl, is just the latest setback for Eifert, as chronicled by the Cincinnati Enquirer. "Since being selected No. 21 overall out of the University of Notre Dame in 2013," they said, "Eifert has endured a variety of injuries. (In) 2013, (he) missed the regular season finale with a stinger. In 2014, he suffered a pre-season shoulder injury and had his season ended in Week 1 with an elbow dislocation after eight plays. Both required surgery to repair. And in 2015, (Eifert) suffered a stinger in Week 11 against St. Louis while recovering a fumble, which forced him out of action the following week in Cleveland." Notice a pattern? A risky pattern?

It isn't very often that a player waits until the far side of their 30th birthday to have their NFL coming-out party, but that's exactly what Barnidge did -- smashing his career highs across the board on his way to a 2015 Pro Bowl nod. Jared Mueller of Scout cautioned that while Barnidge will still be a big part of the Browns' offense in 2016, duplicating last year's third-place fantasy finish will be difficult. "As the Browns turn the page on another season," Mueller said, "their best offensive weapon from last season is in a transition place. He isn't likely to be featured like last season, but is a huge red-zone threat. He is signed for three more seasons at a reasonable price but isn't likely in the Browns' long term plans. He can play an important role on the Browns' offense but maybe a more important role on the trade market." Still, given his current ADP and where Barnidge finished last season, it's hard not to like a tight end with top-5 upside available at a discount.

As Anthony Fabrikant of isportsweb wrote recently, Ertz turned it on in a big way down the stretch last year after a miserable start to the season. "People forget that Ertz sustained an injury to his abdomen during the preseason," he wrote, "and Ertz even admitted that the injury prevented him from performing at a high level at the start of the season. However, the second half of the season told a different tale. In Weeks 9-17, Ertz compiled 46 receptions, 539 yards, and both of his touchdowns in the season. The final four games Ertz was nearly unstoppable as he notched 35 catches for 450 yards and a touchdown. As Bradford shined down the stretch last season, Ertz exposed division opponents like the Redskins and New York Giants for 22 catches and 274 yards in the last two games of 2015. In terms of both fantasy football and Philadelphia Eagles games, don't sleep on Zach Ertz." New head coach Doug Pederson likes his tight ends in the passing game, making Ertz a decent consolation prize if you miss out on the "elite" options early.

Thomas' first season in J-ville wasn't what the Jaguars were hoping for when they inked him to a big free agent deal. After 12 touchdowns in both 2013 and 2014, Thomas managed only five scores a year ago. But he told ESPN he has his heart set on bigger and better things in the upcoming season. "It's hard to quantify how much (of a task it is) getting to a new team with a new offense and missing a majority of training camp, and then trying to get yourself in a rhythm and ready to go in the middle of the season," Thomas told ESPN.com Tuesday. "Also developing a relationship and a chemistry with a quarterback. It's probably as hard a transition you could have. Me and Blake have a much better relationship, a much better understanding of each other, and most importantly getting more reps. I think that most good quarterback-receiving position duos have played together for a while, so it's kind of important." If Thomas rebounds in 2016, he could end up being quite the bargain given his modest asking price.

At 35 years of age, Gates is nearing the end of the line. And the Chargers appear to be preparing for life without him, drafting youngster Hunter Henry in 2016. However, Travis Wakeman of FanSided thinks Gates isn't ready for the scrap heap just yet. "The Chargers didn't draft Henry to sit on the bench," Wakeman said, "so expect Gates to come in on obvious passing downs and red-zone opportunities. Gates has always had a knack for finding the end zone, and that won't change, even if he is aging. Imagine an offense that has a healthy Keenan Allen and a shifty, athletic Travis Benjamin at the wide receiver spots. Then you add in the big Henry at the tight end spot and suddenly, Gates doesn't receive anywhere near the attention he has from defenses throughout his career." Gates is still going to have his moments in 2016 -- and a big game or two. But a limited role is going to make consistent production difficult, and Gates' days as a weekly starter may have come and gone.

This is hardly the first year fantasy pundits have called for Green to break out. However, in the opinion of FanSided's Daniel Thomas, 2016 will be the year it finally happens. "It's been awhile since the Steelers have had a physical specimen at tight end similar to Green," Thomas said. "The speed, athleticism and the run after the catch abilities from the tight end position is an entirely new dynamic to the recent Steelers' offenses. Green is younger, more athletic and dynamic than Miller ever was when Haley took over the Steelers' offense. People expect second-year WR Sammie Coates to pick up the slack with Martavis Bryant out for 2016, but it'll be Green who has the ability to line up in the slot, who will benefit most. Miller's final four year average of 64-676-3.5 and 87 targets should be the floor for Green's projected 2016 season." In case you were wondering, that floor would put Green at the back end of TE1 territory in 12-team leagues -- in other words, right about where he's being drafted. Paying for a players' floor rather than their ceiling is called value. We like value.

With Coby Fleener leaving in free agency, there's no longer a two-headed monster at tight end in Indy -- it's Allen's show now. Head coach Chuck Pagano told Josh Wilson of SBNation he expects Allen to thrive in the increased role. "I just think based on his body of work and what he brings to the table," Pagano said. "When you look around the league, he meets all the requirements that we're going to ask of our starting tight end. He's one of the better blockers in the league. We know, when healthy, he can be a mismatch. Guy's a big-body guy, he can make plays, he's going to be big for us in the red area. He's a starting tight end. He's a damn good tight end. That's why he's here." When healthy, Allen has shown flashes of the talent and athletic ability that portend some real fantasy potential. However, largely due to Allen's lengthy injury history, he has been unable to produce on a consistent basis. 2016 would seem to be the best shot Allen's had to shake that shaky reputation.

Like Antonio Gates, Witten's best days are behind him. However, Brandon George of The Dallas Morning News isn't ready to say that Witten's days of being productive are truly over. "Hard to say," George said, "but he's shown no signs of slowing down. You would think he'd still be a strong contributor throughout the remainder of this contract. That's two more years. And I'd say he has at least another two more years on top of that in him." Matthew Postins of Scout agreed. "What Witten is doing right now is amazing," he said. "If you're not watching it you're missing out. As long as he stays healthy, I suspect Witten will have another great season. He's aging well and paving his own way to the Hall of Fame. And he likely won't be done after 2016, either." Of course, playing well from an NFL standpoint is one thing, and being fantasy-relevant is another. Last year's ninth-place finish in PPR formats is likely about as good as it's going to get -- draft accordingly.

With the retirement of Calvin Johnson, the pressure has increased for all the Lions' pass-catchers (Ebron included) to pick up the slack. Ebron told the Detroit Free Press he's aware of the void -- and of the talk that his NFL career to date has been a disappointment. "We all feel the pressure," Ebron said. "That's a big hole to fill. It's like a dark hole. Nobody wants to go in there. But somebody's got to do it. Somebody has to be willing and step up and progress to try and be that guy. I don't feel that I have to prove a lot. Every day, I feel that I have to prove something to myself. I'm here for myself and my family and the things that I do. I don't feel that I have to prove anything to anyone but me. I've got to make myself happy if I'm going to be happy. I can't worry about what other people think or say about me." The talent and potential is there with Ebron -- but it's hardly guaranteed he'll realize it.

Football injuries don't really get much worse than a torn patellar tendon. New York Giants wideout Victor Cruz tore his back in 2014 -- and hasn't played since. However, Seattle GM John Schneider told the team's website that Graham's rehab is going well. "He seems to be doing great, he's got a great attitude about it," Schneider said. "He's got a smile on his face, really attacking rehab every day. We're glad to have him back in the building, and he seems to be doing a good job." However, head coach Pete Carroll indicated to ESPN Radio there's no set timetable for the former Pro Bowler's return. "Jimmy's a little farther behind than Thomas (Rawls). We won't rush anything. We'll use all six weeks (of training camp) in there and take advantage of it," Carroll said. "I think we'll ease into training camp for both guys, you know." A healthy Graham would be a bargain as a fantasy TE2. But we have no idea when (or even if) Graham might actually be healthy. He's a risk/reward play.

ASJ got off to a solid start last season, but a shoulder injury limited him to only six games. He told the Tampa Bay Times he's intent on staying on the field this season. "It's everything to me. This is my life," said the 23-year-old Seferian-Jenkins. "I love football so much. I've played this game since I was in second grade, and there's nothing more important to me than playing football. Fighting back and pushing through some serious injuries to be out there was all I cared about." Head coach Dirk Koetter said he can't wait to get his athletic tight end back in action. "You can't get mad at a player based on injuries," Koetter said. "You can get frustrated about the injuries. That's hard, and I know it's hard for the fans. But you have to realize (players are) trying to get out there and play, and ... that's not always in their best interest. When Austin is out there, he makes plays." There's fantasy upside to be had here, but durability concerns drop ASJ to the bottom of the TE1 tier.

With Martellus Bennett now in New England, it's Miller's time to shine as the Bears' top tight end. Miller told ESPN's Jeff Dickerson he welcomes the challenge, although he's more interested in winning football games than filling up the stat sheet. "I just want to win," Miller said. "I don't set personal, like, 'I need this many catches, X amount.' I got money things that matter [incentives built in the contract], but those take care of themselves. I just want to win. If we produce and we play well, those things will kind of take care of themselves. I'm sure there are certain goals that I'll set when the season gets closer. But at this point, it's just doing what we can do to get better on a daily basis." The Bears have more questions than answers at wideout, which would appear to position Miller for a possible Gary Barnidge-type late-blooming surprise season. It's not often that a 31-year-old gets a lot of buzz about being a potential "upside sleeper" play, but Miller fits that bill in 2016.

The Pats added Bennett in an effort to recapture the glory days when Rob Gronkowski and Aaron Hernandez terrorized opposing defenses. Sean Wagner-McGough of CBS Sports thinks New England may well have accomplished that goal. "Let's begin with Bennett's abilities as a pass-catcher," he said. "Since 2012 -- Bennett's only season with the Giants and the first time he was treated as a No. 1 tight end -- Bennett's played in 59 games. In those 59 games, he's totaled 263 receptions, 2,740 yards, and 19 touchdowns. That might not seem like an overwhelming stat line over the course of four seasons, but according to Pro Football Reference's database, Bennett's recorded the fourth-most receptions among all tight ends in that span. Only Jason Witten, Jimmy Graham, and Greg Olsen caught more passes." Bennett's status as second banana is likely going to bring with it some week-to-week variance, but the Beantown Boys have shown in the past they can field two fantasy-relevant players at the position. Of the late-round dart throws at the position, Bennett's one of the more intriguing options.

The Jordan Cameron who broke out for the Cleveland Browns in 2013 appeared long gone last year, as he didn't crack even 400 receiving yards and finished 28th in PPR fantasy points. In fact, as the Palm Beach Post reported, after last year's dismal performance Cameron took a pay cut to stay in Miami. "It doesn't feel good," he said. "But at the same time I didn't do much to deserve a raise, I'll tell you that much. I got a lot of phone calls regarding coach Gase and his ability to maximize guys and their potential and get everything out of them. If you look at his offenses in the past, they use the tight end." Cameron also hopes improved chemistry with Ryan Tannehill will help. "We get better every day," Cameron explained. "It's one of those things, you have a new offense so we're learning the timing of the routes. He's learning the timing of the routes. That's why these OTAs and these mini-camps are so important." Gase or not, you can color us skeptical until we see it on the field.

Clay's numbers were down a bit in 2015, partly because he missed three games and partly because of the Bills' run-oriented offense. But Clay told the Tulsa World he isn't dissatisfied with his role on the team. "I mean everything (last) year is kind of like that," Clay said. "Every offensive player in their own right is, you hate to say it, but is selfish in a certain way. But at the same time there is only one ball to go around. At the end of the day winning trumps everything. When you got guys like LeSean [McCoy] and Sammy [Watkins] and guys like that, it is understandable you want to get those guys the ball. Guys understand that and as long as we win we are all fine. Whether I am catching balls or blocking as long as we win I am fine with it." Still, even in a "down" 2015, Clay managed a TE14 finish, and likely would have cracked the top 12 had he not missed time. There's some fantasy value here.

With all the uncertainty surrounding the tight end position in 2016, every fantasy owner and their mother are looking for values at the position. In the opinion of Adam Rank of NFL.com, Walford belongs at the top of the list. "Let's hope that he's recovered from his ATV accident," Rank said. "And here's the deal, NFL players. I understand that you all love these activities. But can you at least take a break from pyrotechnics, weed and ATVs for the next decade? Hit that big paycheck, retire young and do what you want. But while you're still in the NFL, can you please be a little safer? Though I suppose that maverick attitude is what helped propel them to the top of their profession, but still. In any event, Walford had some nice games during his rookie season. He thrived in the Danger Zone, but now he's ready to go legit. Coach Jack Del Rio called him a 'complete' player, and his role in the offense is ready to expand." Consider yourself forewarned.

Rudolph didn't have a great season in 2015, failing to hit the 500-yard mark. But he did manage to play in all 16 games and Rudolph finished 13th at the position in PPR fantasy points. Rudolph told the Twin Cities Star-Tribune that heading into the 2015 offseason healthy was a big plus after injury-marred seasons in both 2013 and 2014. "To end the year healthy and go into the offseason not starting with rehab, being able to train and allow myself to become in better shape, which just carries over into the practice field," he said. The fact is, Rudolph is never going to be an elite fantasy option. Or even an especially good one. That's partly due to his durability issues, and partly due to the conservative nature of the Vikings' offense with Teddy Bridgewater at the helm. But, as last year's fantasy finish shows, Rudolph does have value for owners as a depth/matchup play/bye-week pick. You just have to keep your expectations for the 26-year-old realistic.

ADP

We have added a new piece of information to our player rankings this year -- the Average Draft Position (ADP). The ADP, which is included with the ranking -- separated by a colon -- represents an average of several recent drafts from around the country. The representation we are using here is by position. You can also convert the ADP to an overall draft position such as 12.07 (12th round - seventh pick). The ADP gives you a feel for where a player is going around the country, allowing you to adjust your draft selection in order to acquire the best players possible. If the CheatSheets magazine ranks a player as the 14th best QB and his ADP is 21, then you may want to wait until a few more QBs are taken before selecting him.

Team Target (TM TRG) is the percentage of pass plays in which an offense "targets" the player in question. This stat can be very telling -- adding a unique perspective on draft day. Percentage Caught (% CHT) further enhances the Team Target stat by providing the number of times each player came through with a reception when targeted.

Every year in fantasy leagues drafters snicker and grin when the first team takes a kicker. Well, Adam Rank of NFL.com is ready to turn that whole notion squarely on its head -- by taking Gostkowski in the FIFTH ROUND. "What's wrong with taking the best player at his position in the fifth round?" Rank said. "Gostkowski scored 168 fantasy points (based on leagues where you get four points for field goals of 40-49 yards as the Lord intended). He outscored the following players who had an ADP of the fifth round. Jonathan Stewart (139), Carlos Hyde (66), Jordan Matthews (139), Julian Edelman (107), Latavius Murray (148) and DeSean Jackson (72). Two quarterbacks carried an ADP of the fifth round last year, Drew Brees and Matt Ryan. Both obviously had more points than Gostkowski. Overall, Gostkowski held his own and exceeded most of the other fifth-round picks." Now, we aren't about to advise taking a kicker -- any kicker -- that early. But Rank has a point. If you're looking to draft the best player at the position, Gostkowski is the guy you want.

The 2015 season was an unmitigated disaster for the Ravens, and the problems in Baltimore extended to Tucker, who saw his accuracy dip below 85 percent. Still, as Ryan Mink of the team's website wrote, there's a good reason why the Ravens slapped the franchise tag on Tucker in March. "Although his field-goal percentage dropped to a career-low 82.5 percent last season," Mink said, "Tucker was rated as the best kicker in the league last year by Pro Football Focus (PFF). It's the second year in a row that he's taken PFF's top spot. Over his four years in Baltimore, he's been clutch, reliable and a beloved part of the locker room and community. Tucker is the second-most accurate kicker in NFL history and limits opponents' return game with his long kickoffs." Tucker isn't sweating not having a new deal. "At this juncture, I'm kind of letting it all just unfold how it's going to unfold, and I'm optimistic that something will get done." He may not be the first kicker fantasy owners reach for in 2016, but Tucker's as good as they come.

You can count Hauschka among those who probably isn't a huge fan of the new longer extra points in the NFL. Not after the 30-year-old missed four of them last season. However, head coach Pete Carroll told the News-Tribune he isn't at all concerned about his kicker's accuracy. "I love what we can count on from our guys," Carroll said. "Steven Hauschka has been a great field-goal guy for us and kicked the ball beautifully on kickoffs -- he's done a great job. It's interesting that our guy and a lot of guys, they don't miss field goals, but they'll miss an extra point now and then," Carroll said. "There's something to it." That something, per Hauschka, is the law of averages. "There's just so many of them," he said. "You'd never have a game where you'd have five 35-yard field goals. But all of a sudden you have five or six (PATs)." Yes, Hauschka may miss the occasional PAT, but he's an accurate kicker with a big leg playing on a prolific offensive team. If Carroll can live with a miss now and again, so can we.

Bailey finished outside the top 10 in most scoring systems last year, largely due to the injuries that tore through the Dallas offense. However, CBS Sports smells a big rebound in Big D this season. "Bailey continues to prove he's among the best fantasy kickers each year," they said, "and he should rebound from a somewhat down campaign in 2015 even though he was No. 11 in standard leagues. The Cowboys were without Tony Romo (collarbone) and Dez Bryant (foot) for most of the season, and Bailey suffered with a career-low 25 extra points (he made 56 and 47 each of the previous two years). But he did make 30 of 32 field goals, including five from at least 50 yards, and his production should rise with Romo and Bryant healthy. Bailey should be considered a No. 1 fantasy kicker heading into the season, and he's worth drafting with a last-round pick in all formats." The best part of that entire assessment? The part where you draft Bailey in the last round -- where God intended fantasy kickers to be drafted.

It's a time of change for Crosby, who told ESPN's Rob Demovsky that he's acclimating to both a new long snapper and a new holder. "Obviously with circumstances of different things, for me, it's just finding a comfort level, trusting those guys, making sure I'm prepared for whatever decisions [the organization] will make. We'll let everything fall as it needs to. I love having that cohesive group, that consistency and that trust we've had over these last six, seven years. Obviously that continuity is extremely important. That's something that [was lacking] early in my career when we had a lot of moving parts there with the punting position. And the consistency of just having Tim (Masthay) and Brett (Goode), all of us together for that long, has been excellent." Of even more import is a bounce-back season by a Packers offense that struggled in 2015. If Aaron Rodgers and company get back after it in 2016, there should be ample opportunities for Crosby to serve as a solid weekly starter for fantasy owners.

The Cardinals had one of the NFL's best offenses in 2015. That meant a big fantasy season for Catanzaro, who finished third at the position in NFL.com default scoring. As Heavy's Rick Rosen wrote, Catanzaro learned his trade from one of the best. "Catanzaro, who had 50 touchbacks on kickoff last season, couldn't even reach the end zone when he started working under (Morten) Andersen," Rosen said. "In addition to his technique, Andersen also helped him refine the mental aspect of his game. 'I took pretty much everything he gave me and I've used it ever since,' Catanzaro said last year. 'He's been unbelievable. He's such a great guy and he's been such a great mentor. I talk to him on a weekly basis.'" Catanzaro has been prone to occasional bouts of inaccuracy, but it's hard not to like the kicker for an Arizona team that piled up both yardage and points last season. It's even easier to like said kicker when he's available in the last round of most fantasy drafts.

At 43 years of age Vinatieri is one of the true elder statesmen of the NFL, a player old enough to literally be the father of some of his teammates. That fact hasn't escaped him, according to Mike Chappell of Fox 59 in Indy. "I've been the oldest guy in the locker room for quite a while," he said. "I don't know when we've had a guy on the team older than me. It's probably been six, seven, eight years. Sometimes it's Mr. Vinatieri, which is hilarious to me," he said. "I laugh. I tell 'em, 'Vinny, Adam, whatever you want to call me is all good.'" However, Vinatieri also insists he can still do the job. "It doesn't have anything to do with loyalty," Vinatieri said. "It's a production league. It's been that way forever. The day I can't do it, I'm sure they won't think twice about getting rid of me. There's no love lost." Last year's 17th-place fantasy finish had more to do with the Colts' injuries than Vinny's age. He should bounce back nicely in 2016.

Gano has established himself as one of the better kickers in the league due in part to playing alongside an offense run by NFL MVP Cam Newton, who propelled the Panthers to impressive scoring totals. Newton's ability to keep the offense moving were a major factor in Gano ranking second in points in the NFL behind New England's Stephen Gostkowski. Can he continue that run? It's not a reach to believe he can. Gano has converted at least 80 percent of his field goal attempts each of the last four seasons and has attempted 35 or more field goals each of the last two. CSSSports.com notes that Gano is a little spotty from 50-plus yards, but that shouldn't keep you from rolling with him as your primary kicker this season.

As the team's website reported, McManus had an excellent 2015 season after a down campaign two years ago. "McManus, who made 86 percent of his 35 regular-season field-goal attempts and 100 percent of his 10 post-season field-goal tries," Ben Swanson said, "was a key factor in the Broncos' Super Bowl season. He was the AFC Special Teams Player of the Month for October, during which time he made nine of 11 field-goal attempts -- including the game-winning 34-yarder in overtime against Cleveland -- and five extra-point attempts. Such excellence was a remarkable turnaround for McManus after a 2014 season in which he hit just 69.2 percent of his field goal attempts. The Broncos signed kicker Connor Barth late in [2014] and relegated McManus to handling kickoffs after being waived, signed to the practice squad, and then promoted back to the 53-man roster." McManus finished inside the top-10 fantasy kickers last year despite the erratic Denver offense. There's no reason to think McManus can't repeat that feat in 2016, and he has a puncher's chance of fighting his way into the top 5.

When we last saw Walsh, he was shanking a chip-shot field goal that would have given the Vikings a victory over the Seattle Seahawks in the NFC Wild Card Round. Walsh told the MMQB that he won't let that miss define him. "What happened was, I rushed it, and I didn't have to," Walsh said. "I didn't power through. It is inexplainable. The whole thing. ... I rushed the process, and you never should do that on a kick. I watched it one time -- on the tablet we get from the team. I watched it, and I saw what I did wrong. I rushed it. The hardest thing is knowing I let my team down. I get emotional when I think of that. That's my job, and I didn't do it. When we all came in on Monday, the day after the game, and I have to look at them, that's the toughest thing." At his best, Walsh has one of the biggest legs in the NFL -- but he's also been prone to bouts of inconsistency leaving him just an OK weekly option.

For Santos, who hails from Brazil, football didn't come naturally. As he told ESPN, it was both an extension of his days playing soccer and a way to get a college education. "Everything in my mind at that time was about soccer," Santos said. "But at the end of high school, I had to make a choice between soccer and football. I chose football. The soccer scholarship money was either 50 or 75 percent [of the total bill]. There would have still been some out-of-pocket costs for my parents. They had made such an investment for me to spend three years in high school in the United States already. When Tulane offered me a full ride for football, and knowing how well-respected a degree from that school is, it was a no-brainer. I was willing to give up soccer for that." Of course, now Santos is well-compensated to play football. Unfortunately for fantasy owners, he plays for a team that just doesn't give him enough scoring chances to be a dependable weekly starter.

At 37 Brown is no spring chicken, but as Ed Valentine of SB Nation pointed out, there's been no indication of a slippage in his quality of play. "Brown's three seasons with the Giants have been the most accurate and consistent of his career," Valentine said. "There is no reason to believe he can't continue to be among the league's best kickers for the next couple of seasons. Brown's kickoffs are good enough, especially with the touchback now bringing the ball out to the 25-yard line, he keeps himself in terrific physical condition, and he's as accurate as any kicker in the league and still has the ability to hit the long field goal when needed." Brown was a top-5 fantasy option in 2015, and in many respects he's the poster child for waiting until the last round to draft one. You can load up on upside plays at running back, grab a sleeper wide receiver or add a backup quarterback -- safe in the knowledge that come the last round Brown's still going to be sitting there.

After personal turmoil led to a suspension and his release from the Broncos, Prater's career was at a crossroads. However, he's since landed on his feet, and at least one ex-teammate told the Detroit Free Press that didn't surprise him. "We've always said jokingly, 'You're the best,' but in a lot of ways we mean that," Denver punter Brandon Colquitt said. "He really is a great kicker. Not to take anything away from (current Broncos kicker) Brandon McManus, but Matt's gone through a lot and he's always back in it and especially this year with not missing a kick I don't think until one of the last games. I think they put him in a bad situation there. I think he was done mentally. I think he thought that game was over. But he's done a great job and to go through that adversity that really says a lot about what he is, how talented he is." The good news? Prater kicks indoors at least nine times a year. The bad? A Detroit offense that lost its best player to retirement.

After an up-and-down 2015 season that saw him miss a higher percentage of extra points than field goals, it would be fair to wonder if Carpenter's confidence is shaken entering this year. He told the Buffalo News that isn't the case. "Kickers in general, we're always under the microscope," Carpenter said. "To our credit, most kickers in this league, we're pretty damn good at it now. When you have a down year or whatever -- everybody gets on you and thinks there are big issues. I can still make it. I mean, I missed four field goals. I went 85 percent. That's my career average over my eight years. It's not like I was in the 70s or missed nine field goals or something like that. Everyone has their opinion on who I am and what I can do. All I can do is continue to work and give everything I can to help this team." That's all well and good, but a mid-range kicker on a ball-control offense doesn't make fantasy owners weak in the knees.

Lambo, who went from MLS washout to NFL starter, played fairly well for the Bolts in 2015, connecting on 26 of 32 attempts. However, special teams coach Gary Zauner told The Guardian Lambo doesn't have much margin for error. "There's been several young kickers get cut already because they don't make everything like the veteran kickers," Zauner said. "I think they looked at his potential. What I heard was [Nick] Novak had better stats in practice over the course of training camp (last year) but Josh Lambo did better in the games. Sometimes coaches only worry about what happens in the games and then don't worry about practice. But when you look at Nick, he is compared to John Carney – Carney kicked a long time. When guys kick an 86-87 percent in their career, that's pretty good. The numbers don't lie over a period of time. Only the test of time will tell you how good Josh Lambo really is." The numbers don't lie -- and Lambo's fantasy numbers aren't especially good. You can do better on draft day.

The Steelers had all sorts of problems in the kicking game last year, but in the opinion of Jeff Hartmann of SB Nation those problems have led fantasy owners to some high-end overthinking in 2016. "When the Pittsburgh Steelers were going through the Rolodex of potential place kickers early in the 2015 season," he said, "they finally made a call which landed them a solid, young and cheap kicker. If (Shaun) Suisham and Boswell both remain very steady and accurate kickers, which isn't a guarantee with Suisham coming off a knee injury, the decision on which kicker to retain, and which to let go in some way, shape or form is a no-brainer. Scratching your head wondering which one the team should keep? Don't hurt yourself, it is Chris Boswell. For anyone thinking it is smart to have Suisham as the kicker in 2016, unless Boswell gets injured, well you simply aren't looking at the whole picture. It is a no-brainer." If Boswell does hang onto the job there might be some fantasy appeal here, but "if" and "might" are headaches you just don't need on draft day.

Dawson re-upped with the Niners back in March, a move the team's website reported was met with smiles by GM Trent Baalke. "Phil is a consummate professional whose production on the field and his leadership in both the locker room and the community have been great assets to our organization," said Baalke. "He has an impressive approach to his craft that has allowed him to consistently rank among the best in the business throughout his career. We are pleased that Phil has chosen to continue his accomplished career with the 49ers." The 41-year-old has had a storied career. Dawson has played in 263 regular season games and has scored 1,605 points, connecting on 386 of 457 field goal attempts and 447 of 456 extra point attempts. Dawson's career field goal percentage (84.5) ranks 14th in NFL history. Those numbers are fairly impressive, and Dawson's still a relatively accurate placekicker. But there's a problem -- given the looming questions that surround the San Francisco offense, it's difficult to place too much faith in their ability to score points.

Back at the turn of the century, "Seabass" was the last kicker ever taken in the first round of the NFL draft. And longtime Raiders exec Amy Trask told Yahoo Sports she believes the pick was a wise one. "I remember that almost immediately after our selection several of our coaches and football staff expressed to me how disappointed and angry they were that Al used that pick on a kicker," Trask said. "Interestingly, over the course of years, some of those very men suggested both that it was a smart pick and that they agreed with Al's selection at the time. It was a terrific selection. Kickers are tremendously important and to those who disagree, I ask this: Seconds remaining in regulation, you need a field goal to beat a hated division rival on the road -- now do you think a kicker is important? We drafted Sebastian in 2000 and in both 2000 and 2001 he kicked a game-winning field goal with time running out -- each time, I'm delighted to note, in Kansas City." Janikowski made two kicks 15 years ago?! Yay! We advise fantasy owners to live in the present -- and pass.

Hopkins went from the street to the NFL playoffs in 2015, but, as the Washington Times wrote, the team's postseason loss didn't sit well with the youngster. "When you don't hit the ball you want, I will say, it changes things. I've thought about it a couple times this year and. ...it makes times when you're employed with a team, makes the disappointment of a first-round loss a little better knowing where you've been," Hopkins said. "I know it's cliche, but I feel really blessed. I was kicking in a park 17, 18 weeks ago." Hopkins still has the confidence of his teammates. "A lot of times not getting nervous is not thought about, but when you have guys like him who just go out there, do their job and don't worry about the external things and nothing gets in their head, it's tough to do consistently," long snapper Nick Sundberg said. "To do it once, OK, but to do it every time, I tip my hat." Hopkins doesn't have much upside, but he is an NFL starter -- and starters have value.

20 Roberto AGUAYO — TB

Exp. Rookie year | Age: 22 | Ht: 6-0 | Wt: 207 | BYE: 6

Aguayo wasn't just the most accurate field goal kicker in FBS history, or the earliest-drafted kicker since Mike Nugent went in Round 2 to the Cincinnati Bengals a decade ago. No, the Buccaneers traded up to acquire the Florida State star, confident that his uncanny accuracy inside 40 yards will serve him well at the NFL level. Aguayo told the MMQB he knows the pressure's on – but it comes with his profession. "What matters is how you bounce back and how you keep your poise," Aguayo says. "You're not going to go 100 percent in your career. That's what the scouts want to see, when they come and see me here live. If you miss a field goal, how do you react? Do you spaz, do you get flustered? When we call a timeout right in front of your face and yell, are you going to stop, are you going to shank it? I feel like that's what I have that separates me from other kickers, just that poise." We'll see soon enough if he's as good as advertised.

The Rams brought Zuerlein back for 2016, but thanks to consistency and accuracy issues the man they call "Legatron" will have to win the starting job in camp. Zuerlein told ESPN he welcomes the challenge. "Any time you go out there and miss kicks, you are not going to be happy about it," Zuerlein said. "I think I've got to get better and convert those kicks. Really, that's all it comes down to is making kicks, and I didn't make as many as I would have liked." Sam Monson of Pro Football Focus isn't sold though. "He burst onto the scene as a rookie," Monson said, "making seven kicks from 50-plus yards and looking like a real weapon for the Rams. Since then, however, his accuracy has faltered, as he missed kicks from inside 40 yards in each of the past two seasons and converted just 66.7 percent of his kicks last year." Add in a Rams offense that is -- well, it ain't the Arizona Cardinals -- and big leg or not, Zuerlein's a player who may be best left to the waiver wire.

The previously mentioned Novak, who San Diego released in favor of Lambo last year? Well, he's in Houston now. So goes the kicker carousel in the NFL. Novak fared well enough in his 2015 Houston audition to rate a second go-round, and he recently told the Houston Chronicle he actually likes the league's new longer PATs. "I like that they made it permanent," said Novak. "It only increases the value of kickers. The worst-case scenario is they take away the extra points or kickoffs. A little modification to our job, to special teams is good as long as it's not taking away our jobs completely. They increased the difficulty, which is good. You should always find ways to make things tougher. Nothing but good things will come from that. You see every year where games are decided on an extra point or field goal. It's a very important play in the game, one I take very seriously." We'd like to take Novak seriously in 2016, but the Texans' offense has a LOT of question marks.

The good news? Bryant plays with a potent offense -- one with the potential to be among the league's most productive. The bad news? The six games Bryant missed due to injury last year are a concern. He's also coming off his first season below 85 percent field goals made after succeeding on just 14 of 18 tries, with three misses coming from 40-plus yards. In addition, the injury raises some concern about Bryant's age. He has 14 years under his belt and just turned 41. So, as Fansided recently pointed out, Bryantâ€™s days in the league are numbered. The Falcons realize this. They signed Nick Rose out of the University of Texas to compete with Bryant for the 2016 starting job. Make sure Bryant wins that battle before you invest on draft day.
